POSEIDON WATER wants to build a seawater desalination plant next to the AES Huntington Beach Generating Station.

Poseidon's desalination plant plans are in choppy waters

BY BETTINA BOXALL

As Poseidon Water pursues the final government approvals needed to build one of the country's biggest seawater desalination plants, the company still cannot definitively say who will buy the 50 million gallons a day of drinking water it wants to produce on the Orange County coast.

That's one of several questions that continue to dog the $1-billion Huntington Beach project as Poseidon tries to seal an iron-clad deal more than two decades after it first proposed the ocean desalter.

During two long days of online hearings last week, members of a regional board that is about to vote on a key Poseidon permit challenged proponents on a number of

They wondered whether Orange County needs the costly supply. They questioned the use of 17-year-old data in gauging the plant's potential harm to marine life. And they expressed doubts about whether Poseidon's wetland restoration plans meet state environmental requirements to offset that harm.

While it is doubtful that the Santa Ana Regional Water Quality Control Board will deny the permit when it continues the hearing Friday at 9 a.m., the panel's skepticism could further slow the much-delayed project. The private company faces still more hurdles at the California Coastal Commission, its next stop after the water board.

During its long quest for approval, Poseidon has cultivated political support with lobbying, campaign contributions and the lure of drought-proof water supplies. Its promise of several thousand construction jobs and new tax revenue has rallied labor support.

But environmental groups have consistently fought the company, arguing that it is privatizing a public resource and has failed to adapt an old proposal to new state ocean protections.

Backers have pitched ocean desalination as an inexhaustible, local supply for a region that imports much of its water from increasingly unreliable, distant sources. Yet the Huntington Beach project has been unable to shake criticisms that Poseidon is trying to fill a need that doesn't exist.

"How can you tell us you have an identified need for water when what you're going to do with it is entirely speculative?" regional water board member Daniel Selmi asked an official of the Orange County Water District, Poseidon's prospective customer.

Board vice-chair William von Blasingame previously raised similar concerns. "It looks like you guys kind of want to go out and see where you can find a home for this water. And it doesn't seem like you have a home," he said at a May workshop.

Need is one of the aspects that regional water boards are required under state law to consider when reviewing plans to construct desalination facilities on the California coast. It factors into the size and location of a project — and thus its impact on the marine en-

During last week's hearing, von Blasingame expressed frustration that the Orange County agency has signed only a nonbinding term sheet to buy the plant's annual deliveries of 56,000 acre-feet of scrubbed seawater. (One acre-foot typically serves two to three Southern California households a year).

"This says you can walk away. ... It seems like you're giving yourself an out," he said.

District officials say they can't sign a final purchase agreement with Poseidon until they Huntington Beach will have a new City Council this fall as the two incumbents decide not to seek second terms.

BY HILLARY DAVIS

Huntington Beach voters will elect all fresh faces to the City Council this fall, as incumbents Lyn Semeta and Patrick Brenden have chosen not to seek second terms.

"I will have more to say in the coming months about what comes next, and am excited to pursue new opportunities where I can utilize the increased knowledge, experience, strength and resilience that this role has brought me," Semeta, this year's mayor, said in a Facebook announcement Thursday evening.

Semeta acknowledged that her year as mayor has been challenging with the impact of the coronavirus pandemic.

"Watching our residents and businesses suffer through devastating loss of income and empathizing with the collective fears and frustrations of the community has weighed on my shoulders because I care so deeply for this community," she wrote. "And yet, I am so honored to serve as Mayor during such a trying time. As I've said so many times this year, I would not have chosen this year and yet I feel my role is such an important one."

Semeta, a lawyer with a strong pro-business bend, has also served Huntington Beach as a member of the city Investment Advisory Board and the planning commission.

By day, Brenden is the chief executive of the Bolsa Chica Conservancy. He was also previously chair of the Huntington Beach Chamber of Commerce. He did not immediately return a request for comment Thursday evening.

One Medical opens office in H.B. as O.C. reports record of 32 COVID-19 deaths

BY MATT SZABO

Orange County reported 32 new deaths from COVID-19 on Thursday, according to figures released by the Orange County Health Care Agency.

The 32 deaths, which includes five skilled nursing facility residents and three assisted living facility residents, represents a single-day high for the county during the COVID-19 pandemic. The previous one-day record was 31 deaths on Saturday, Orange County's COVID-19related death toll during the pandemic now stands at 697.

Another option in regard to testing was recently offered for local residents, as One Medical opened an office in Huntington Beach on July 29. The office is at 21034 Pacific Coast Highway, Level 2, Suite C230, in Pacific know the price of the water, and Poseidon says it can't provide a definite price until it has obtained all the necessary permits.

The company has also made it clear that it won't build the Huntington Beach plant — its second big coastal desalter in California after one in Carlsbad — unless it has a firm contract with a public agency to buy all the supplies over the expected 50-year life of Those supplies will be among the most expensive in the state. At roughly $2,250 an acre-foot, including distribution, the desalted ocean water would be roughly twice as costly as treated imported supplies from the Metropolitan Water District of Southern California.

And if cities don't step up to buy the Poseidon supplies from the Orange County district, officials say they would inject it into the regional groundwater basin that is the primary water source for north and central Orange County residents. That would drive up groundwater costs.

Board members questioned district officials about why they wanted to replace imported deliveries with much more expensive desalinated supplies that would inevitably push up residential and commercial water rates.

Board Chair William Ruh said household water bills were bound to rise more than district estimates of $3 to $6 a month and worried about the impact on working class families and small businesses.

John Kennedy, executive director of engineering and water resources for the Orange County district, responded that he expects the cost of imported water will catch up with desalination prices in coming years.

More fundamentally, he told the board his agency wants to reduce the county's reliance on Metropolitan imports from the north, which are subject to cuts related to drought and environmental regulation.

Another stumbling block for Poseidon is state requirements to mitigate the project's harm to the marine environment.

The company plans to build the desalter on the grounds of the AES Huntington Beach Generating Station, which will soon cease operation, and use the power plant's existing ocean cooling pipes to tap the Pacific.

Poseidon would draw 106 million gallons a day of seawater through the huge offshore intake pipe, which would be screened. and use reverse osmosis membranes to rid the seawater of salt and impurities.

That process would produce 56 million gallons a day of brine concentrate — roughly twice as salty as the ocean — which would AND SUPPORTERS of the Poseidon desalination water facility voice their opinions during the California State Lands Commission meeting at the Huntington Beach City Hall council chambers in October 2017.

be dumped back into the Pacific via a 1,500-foot discharge pipe equipped with outfall diffusers to promote mixing and dilution.

The intake and discharge operations will take a toll on plankton, which plays a crucial role in the marine food chain, killing an estimated 300,000 microscopic organisms a day.

That estimate is based on a 2003 study of Huntington Beach waters that was supplemented with more recent ocean sampling. Water board members questioned why a new study wasn't conducted and expressed doubts about the adequacy of Poseidon's environmental mitigation plans.

The company proposes to conduct 112 acres of environmental work at the nearby Bolsa Chica wetlands, Southern California's largest saltwater marsh. Most of the efforts would consist of dredging to maintain the inlet that allows ocean water to circulate in and out of the marsh. Only about 6 acres of wetlands would be re-

"I don't think this mitigation comes close" to meeting state requirements to fully offset the loss of marine life, board member Selmi said.

Proponents argue that without the long-term funding for dredging that Poseidon would provide, Bolsa Chica's survival is threatened. The inlet could close within a few years, choking off the es-

But Coastal Commission senior environmental scientist Tom Luster recommended that the water board require additional mitigation elsewhere. Sea level rise, he warned, will reconfigure Bolsa Chica, making it unlikely that the inlet dredging could continue for the life of the desalter.

Coastal Commission, which next reviews the project, has the final say on mitigation. And Luster indicated his agency won't be satisfied with the Bolsa Chica plan.

55, 405 freeway connectors closing through the weekend

The 55 Freeway connectors to the 405 will be closed this weekend for pavement work, and the work will impact the drive time to John Wayne Airport, so travelers should plan accordingly.

Caltrans announced both the southbound and northbound 55 connectors will close at 10 p.m. Friday and reopen at 5 a.m. on Monday.

The northbound detour sends motorists to the Mac-Arthur Boulevard exit, then southbound on MacArthur and left to the 405 southbound onramp. The southbound detour goes to the northbound 405 Bristol Street exit, left onto Bristol and then right onto the southbound 405 onramp.

proper response to concerns of employees' repeated exposure to the virus.

"The hospital has failed to develop and implement effective infection control procedures and practices in order to reduce the risk of the transmission of [SARS-CoV-2], the virus that causes the coronavirus disease COVID-19," the complaint stated.

The document further alleges the facility violates portions of California Code that outline requirements for hospitals and states employees should receive appropriate training on infection control policies and procedures.

In a demonstration Thursday outside the hospital's emergency department, NUHW representatives urged their 734 members to vote and voice their concerns about administrators they say aren't doing enough to protect patients and staff.

"We are asking Fountain Valley staff to vote no confidence in the administration because we believe they will not go above the bare minimum," operating room employee and union shop steward Ron Rosano said to a crowd of about 50. "They must work to earn the trust and the respect of the frontline caregivers."

Employees say they have collectively and individually contacted hospital leadership about the lack of proper virus testing and contact tracing following incidents of exposure.

In a survey conducted by NUHW, 93% of employee respondents said they did not believe the hospital was doing enough to keep patients safe from infection, while 75% said they have been required to treat infected and uninfected patients while wearing the same personal protective equipment.

On Thursday, Orange County reported 32 new coronavirus deaths, a singleday record that brings the countywide death total to Employees at Thursday's demonstration said the hospital will not test employees who do not exhibit symptoms, even when they've come into contact with patients and co-workers who soon after tested positive for the virus.

Josh Jesus, a CT Tech in the radiology department, said a colleague was infected and hospitalized with COVID-19 in late June. When employees who'd worked with the man requested testing, they were sent home to self-quarantine and given a list of Orange County testing sites.

"We asked for (onsite) testing, and they said, 'What if all 500 employees came in one day?' " Jesus said. "What about testing people who just got exposed? That's why we're heading down this path - settings than traditional healthcare, as well as on-demand virtual care through a mobile app.

One Medical also opened its first Orange County office in Irvine on July 6 and has more than 85 offices in large markets across the United States. In Orange County, it is partnered with specialty care services through Providence/Hoag Memorial Hospital Presbyterian.

The company is offering complimentary 30-day memberships to anyone with COVID-19 concerns during the pandemic using the code GETCARE30, said Dr. Natasha Bhuyan, West Coast regional medical director for One Medical.

Overall, Orange County reported 580 new positive tests for the coronavirus Thursday, bringing the county to 38,711 cumulative cases. There were 3,330 daily PCR tests received, and 448,087 total tests have now been issued.

There are currently 517 hospitalizations due to the virus, with 171 of those patients in intensive care units.

"Widespread testing is one of those key public health pillars in fighting and being able to control the pandemic in the long run, Bhuyan said.

"Čertainly people who have active symptoms, we want to prioritize those people, but I think we are also aware that about 40% of cases might be spreading from people who are asymptomatic or pre-symptomatic. They might have a high risk of exposure; they might live with somebody who is positive for COVID. Those people need access to testing as well ... and the other people who are at high risk are essential workers. You think about people in grocery stores and food services, and they're continually potentially being exposed."

Bhuyan said that One Medical offers an advantage in that because it's also a primary care platform, it can offer guidance beyond the test.

"There's a lot of shortterm and long-term effects," she said. "Some people, their symptoms are mild, but some people might have a fever for eight days, or a headache or diarrhea. I think it's not just important that we test, but it's important that we're able to manage the results of that test. The other piece, too, is there's some people who have symptoms, but they test negative. Now we can manage, maybe your symptoms are due to asthma or maybe your symptoms are due to something else, and let's manage that condition we have zero confidence they're doing everything they can to protect employees and patients."

Staff say patients are not tested upon arrival if they do not present symptoms. Union members have requested all newly admitted patients and employees who have been exposed to the virus be tested onsite. They are also asking that all patients wear facial coverings.

Barbara Lewis, NUHW's Southern California hospital division director, who helped draft the July 1 complaint, said the state Department of Public Health opened an investigation into Fountain Valley Regional Hospital and Medical Center the following day.

Surveyors made multiple visits to the facility late last month and conducted closed-door interviews with employees and administrators, Lewis said. Before those visits. COVID-19 patients were being seen in several different units of the facility, potentially exposing uninfected patients. Now they are being treated in a unit cordoned off from the general population. "That is major progress, and it happened because of the complaint our members filed," Lewis said. "We had been meeting with management since mid-March, and this was one of our key issues, but management would not make the changes.'

Lewis said one nurse who worked in a unit treating COVID-19 patients became infected and died on June 5. The complaint indicated "nearly a dozen" employees had tested positive so far, but exact numbers are unknown and are not being reported by administrators.

McFarland's office declined a request for an interview, responding instead with a statement in which it stated the facility is following guidelines issued by the California Department of Public Health and the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention.

"We worked collaboratively with the surveyors and quickly implemented some changes to address the issues they raised," the statement said. "While we value all of our employees who are represented by the NUHW, we are disappointed that the union is taking this action."

COVID-19-positive patients may be kept in the same unit as uninfected patients, the statement continued, but are placed in separate rooms with closed doors and posted signage. As a further precaution, infection control personnel are ensuring personal protective equipment is being worn and discarded in a safe manner.

Jennifer Carter, a telemetry nurse at Fountain Valley Regional for the past 25 vears, came to Thursday's demonstration as a show of support, though she and fellow nurses are not represented by NUHW but by the United Nurses Associations of California.

She said she knows five employees from different units who've tested positive for the virus and described the COVID-19-unit nurse who died in June as an older individual at high risk of infection who was "on a ventilator for quite a while."

"There's a lot of fear — of getting COVID-19, bringing it home to family, giving it to patients," Carter said of employees' desire for more testing. "Every patient who comes into the emergency room should be tested. If they leave our ER, but they're asymptomatic, they're going to go out and spread it."

Lawrence Erwin Klein

1933 - 2020

Lawrence Erwin Klein, aka Poppy, died peacefully on July 17, 2020 from COVID-19. He was 86 years old.

Larry was born in Brooklyn on July 24, 1933 and quickly moved to Texas where he acquired his signature southern drawl. Growing up in the hardscrabble Jewish section of South Dallas, Larry was determined to make something of himself after his father died before his thirteenth birthday. Larry attended UT-Austin where he played on the football team. Áfter setbacks and considering dropping out of college, Larry applied the work ethic he learned as an athlete to his academics and graduated in 1955. Soon after, he fell in love with Carla Jean Langert and they married in 1957. Working as a physical therapist, Larry developed an interest in medicine. With three toddlers at home, he enrolled at UT-Southwestern Medical School and graduated at the top of his class in 1965. As a resident at Parkland Memorial Hospital, he was the first medical professional to take care of President

John F. Kennedy after he was shot on November 22, 1963. After medical school, Larry served as a naval officer in Long Beach, California. In 1969, he moved his family to Newport Beach and welcomed a fourth child. In private practice as an Ob/Gyn at Hoag Hospital, Larry delivered more than 5,000 babies during his 40-year career. He was admired for his intelligence, charm and easy-going bedside manner. After his retirement in 2004, Larry was often chased down by colleagues and adoring former patients.

Larry spent his free time at the gym, playing tennis, skiing and left his mark telling naughty jokes. He loved reading biographies, listening to Johnny Cash, and solving crossword puzzles. Larry relished gnawing on a juicy T-bone, drinking fine wine and espressos, and hollering at the TV when his Longhorns or Cowboys fumbled.

He visited his family in NYC and the Berkshires often and enjoyed taking his grandkids for ice cream, then trying to sneak a taste. These shenanigans inspired a story he cowrote with his youngest grandchild, "Don't Let Poppy Hold Your Ice Cream Larry passed away peacefully with his daughter, Stacy, by his side. The family thanks the team at Hoag Hospital for his care, especially Larry's dear friend, Dr. Joe Riggio.

Larry was predeceased by his wife in 2012. He is survived by his children: Glenna Klein, Stacy Yeany, Scott Klein, and Keri Bernstein; his son-in-law: Ron Bernstein; and his grandchildren: Austin Yeany, Hayden Yeany, Kelby Klein, McKenna Klein, Zachary Bernstein, and Sophie Bernstein.

A celebration of life event is currently unsafe, so please honor Larry by opening an elegant Pinot Noir or re-telling one of his jokes! He would want all of us to enjoy life to the fullest as he did.
