County receives a new vaccine shipment after winter-storms delay

BY LILLY NGUYEN

Orange County has received more than 83,000 additional doses of COVID-19 vaccine, which will allow health officials to continue vaccinating residents after appointments were canceled last week.

"Roughly 50% of the 83,000 doses we've received will be distributed to our county super [point of dispensing sites] and mobile PODs, and the rest are on their way to various providers, hospitals and community clinics," said Dr. Clayton Chau, the director of the Orange County Health Care Agency.

Molly Nicholson, a county spokeswoman, also confirmed in an email Thursday that the allocations for this and last week were received.

Delays of shipment were caused by the severe winter storms that wreaked havoc across the country, and officials initially closed the Disneyland super POD on Feb 18, citing shortages. The site reopened on Wednesday to provide a second dose of the Pfizer-BioNTech COVID-19 vaccine for eligible recipients with appointments. It closed again Thursday, with officials citing expected high winds.

As of Thursday, data from the Orange County Health Care Agency indicates that about 261,585 residents have received the first dose of either of the available vaccines. An estimated 165,064 residents have received both the first and second doses. Vaccines are being distributed to those classified under Phase 1A, which includes healthcare workers and those 65 or older.

As vaccinations continue, the county also reported Thursday that there were 174 new cases of the coronavirus and 41 new deaths from COVID-19.

Of those deaths, five were skilled nursing facility residents and six lived in assisted nursing facilities. One homeless individual died in addition to 29 others not living in a facility.

To date, there have been 245,634 cases reported countywide. About 515 patients are currently hospitalized, with 160 in intensive care units. An estimated 228,838 residents have recovered from infection. The county also surpassed a new

Newport Harbor's Evan Langston commits to Colorado Springs

John Polovina played minor league baseball in the St. Louis Cardinals organization in the late 1960s before suffering a rotator cuff injury.

Today, it's more difficult for Polovina to make it to a ballpark. The 71-year-old was diagnosed with Parkinson's disease a few years ago.

Still, Polovina and his wife Kay are avid supporters of the Newport Harbor High School baseball team. This is especially true when their grandson, senior Evan Langston, is on the mound.

Evan's mother, Cortney Polovina, said her father's attendance at the field is helping to keep him actively engaged in life. "It's pretty amazing to watch ... [Newport Harbor] baseball literally keeps my dad alive."

With COVID-19 numbers lessening in Orange County, Evan Langston and the rest of coach Evan Chalmers' Sailors appear to be ready for a baseball season.

Costa Mesa mulls effects of cannabis

Adding a new industry sector is anticipated to bring the city more than $3 million in tax revenue, but it comes at a cost.

BY SARA CARDINE

You have to spend money to make money. That seems to be the case in Costa Mesa, where officials are considering increasing staffing to handle retail cannabis businesses coming online under Measure Q, passed by voters in November.

The addition of a new industry sector is anticipated to generate more than $3 million annually through a 7% gross tax on retail cannabis sales and delivery. On Monday, members of the City Council were asked to discuss increasing the city's payroll, to the tune of $1.2 million, to accommodate the transition.

City Manager Lori Ann Farrell Harrison called the proposal a "first glance" at the kind of resources that will be needed to process permits, enforce regulations and punish bad actors.

"[This] is basically what we think, at minimum, is necessary to start down this path," she told the council in a study session Tuesday. "We'll have to build some additional resources, training and bringing other resources to bear, for it to work really well."

City Finance Director Carol Molina broke down the proposal into individual positions, by department. Two full-time code enforcement officers, at the cost of $265,612, will be required to identify cannabis retailers that aren't permitted, perform site visits and issue citations.

A full-time assistant planner (a position pegged at $129,598 annually) would review facilities' building permits and respond to requests for plan review, while three specialists would engage in a range of duties, from processing new and renewed business license to performing fire inspections and certifying cannabis businesses to ensure they open safely and in a timely manner.

Two police officers, at an estimated cost of $498,203 would handle calls for service, oversee regulation of the new businesses

OBITUARY

Courtesy of Mary Ellen Goddard

Art Goddard, Costa Mesa historian, remembered as 'lovable' and 'very bright'

He was part of the Costa Mesa Historical Society and Friends of the Costa Mesa Libraries.

BY LILLY NGUYEN

How do you begin to explain Art Goddard? His wife, Mary Ellen Goddard, considers her words carefully.

He was loving, she says at first. He was smart and never tried to get attention. He liked to do things for the sake of doing them. He liked to work, even after his retirement in 2001 — because he wouldn't have been happy sitting on his behind, she jokes. He was honest, and she knew she could always trust him.

Her husband of 55 years and a fixture of the Costa Mesa Historical Society and the Friends of the Costa Mesa Libraries, Art died on Feb. 13 of complications with prostate cancer.

He would have been 79 next month.

Art was born in Washington, D.C., but his family lived all over the country, moving to New York before settling down in Plymouth, Mass. His father was a chemist, then a lobster fisherman. As a teen, Art started catching the crustaceans alongside his father during the summer months to earn a little spending money. Around that time he also became interested in amateur ham radio, earning his license to operate in 1956.

He attended Worcester Polytechnic Institute for his undergraduate studies and received his master's degree at Montana State University.

The couple met in Alaska. Mary Ellen had traveled up to the state with her family because of her father's teaching job, and Art was working for the Geophysical Institute in Fairbanks. They married in 1965, a little more than a year after they met, just before Art was about to leave for a job in Thailand.

"Before he went overseas, he said, 'Let's get married before I go over there and you can come with me.' " Mary Ellen said, laughing softly.

They moved to Bangkok before returning to the United States to live in Montana and Iowa. They would eventually make their way to California in 1977. Costa Mesa has been their home ever since.

Their two children, Andrew and Amy Goddard, were born in 1968 and 1972 and live in Orange County.

The Goddards were well-traveled, and Art routinely went on trips around the globe to participate in ham radio competitions.

He loved taking photographs on those trips too, always joking about what they'd do with the photos now that they had them. She didn't know what to do with them either, now that he's gone.

He became involved with the Costa Mesa Historical Society and the Friends of the Costa Mesa Libraries after Mary Ellen did. He worked with computers to help digitize records and make copies of historic photos for interested parties. Tony Doder, a spokesman for the city of Costa Mesa, said Goddard was active in fundraising for the new library.

"They [are] the heart and soul of many very important activities in the city of Costa Mesa," said Bob Ooten of the Goddards, who credits the two with the decorative historic decals around the utility boxes. Barbara Steck, who knew the Goddards through the historical society, said Art was always there to help with any audiovisual issues, and she knew him as a kind person.

Steck said she remembered him being the voice of reason and calm when she and Mary Ellen would get frustrated over the library and what was or wasn't happening.

"He just had a very delightful sense of humor, and he adored Mary Ellen," said Cheryl Ooten. "He absolutely just adored her."

Ooten recalls when Mary Ellen retired from her job at UC Irvine's libraries and began to volunteer full time. The two spent lots of time volunteering side by side, and she remembers when Art "sort of" twisted her husband Bob's arm to step up as president of the Friends of the Costa Mesa Libraries because Mary Ellen was spread too thin.

"He was very upfront. You knew what he felt, but he was just a real leader and you listened to him," said Cheryl Ooten, "but he was very, very lovable too."

Ooten said she and Mary Ellen were in the same neighborhood walking group and she remembers the group went to sing "Happy Birthday" to Art last year as a way of safely celebrating his birthday in light of the pandemic. Ooten laughed, adding that she didn't think most men would enjoy something like that but that it seemed as if though Art really enjoyed it.

"[The Goddards] kept us, the historical society, going. He was very responsible, very bright," Cheryl Ooten said.

"He'll be desperately missed with all the time and effort he's put into the [Costa Mesa] Historical Society," offered Bob Ooten.

A memorial service is planned for Goddard once the pandemic restrictions lift, and it is possible to safely gather.

When it was time for him to start high school, Evan decided to leave mom Cortney and younger brother Jake in Mammoth and move to Newport Beach so he could live with his grandparents and pursue baseball.

The move also afforded John Polovina more opportunities to see his grandson play.

December 17, 1925 - November 6, 2020

Barbara H. Davies of Corona del Mar, passed away on November 6, 2020 at the age of 94 surrounded by her family. Barbara was preceded in death by her loving husband James, son Henry (Terry), parents Harold and Dorothy and sister Shirley. Barbara is survived by her sons, James Jr. and Thomas, daughter Anne (Thomas) and grandchildren, Thomas, Beryl, Daniel and Dana.

Barbara was born in Queens, New York on December 17, 1925 and was raised on Long Island. Her family moved to Englewood, NJ where she attended Dwight Morrow High School and was a member of the cheerleading squad. Barbara went on to work as a legal secretary for the law firm of Gilinsky, Schur and Mishkin in New York City. She married James in 1953 and they settled in Sparta, New Jersey. In 1963, the family moved to Corona del Mar where Barbara was an active parent at Our Lady Queen of Angels School and enjoyed offering her time to volunteer work. After her children were grown, she learned to golf and play the organ. Barbara was involved in the formation of the St. John Vianney Chapel Guild where she attended daily mass. Barbara sang in the choir and later worked as administrative assistant to Msgr. Lawrence J. Baird. A wonderful hostess, her home was always open to family and friends. # 6 ways you can help save the iconic monarch butterfly

BY JEANETTE MARANTOS

This is not a drill. California is poised to lose the Western monarch butterfly and its mysterious annual migration from the continent's Western regions to the coastal areas between Baja and Mendocino.

The list for blame is long — habitat destruction, insecticides, herbicides and, yes, good intentions, because if you've ever planted a showy orange milkweed in Southern California with the goal of helping the monarch, consider yourself part of the problem.

So why should we care? First off, caterpillars are a critical food source for most songbirds, which rely heavily on the insects to feed their young. Second, butterflies, like bees, are important pollinators. Adult monarchs sip nectar from many blossoms, and as they flit among flowers, they are also spreading pollen, helping the plants produce seeds, which also feed birds and other wildlife and, of course, help the plant reproduce.

And third, butterflies are just plain beautiful, especially the monarch with its orange wings rimmed in black with white dots. Can our world really afford to lose something so miraculous?

Fortunately, there are things SoCal gardeners and plant parents can do to help monarchs survive, such as eliminating any use of pesticides or herbicides on their property — but first a little background:

Eastern monarch butterflies are well known for their famous migration from the Eastern and Central regions of the United States to Mexico each winter, where they congregate by the thousands to mate and stay warm. Their numbers have dropped significantly, from 384 million in 1996 to 60 million in 2019.

But their cousins, the Western monarchs, have seen a more terrible decline.

Western monarch numbers have been steadily dropping for decades, from 1.2 million in 1997 to 30,000 in 2019, but the most recent results from the 24th Western Monarch Thanksgiving Count are staggering — just 1,914 butterflies total, down from the millions that used to migrate from the Pacific Northwest and Central California to overwinter along the coast from Mendocino in Northern California to Ensenada in Baja California.

One of the most disturbing finds from last fall came after wildfire ripped through the area around Pacific Grove, a.k.a. Butterfly Town, USA, in the midst of traditional migration season. During the Thanksgiving count, not a single monarch was found in Pacific Grove, a tourist mecca for people who come to marvel at the swarms of Western monarchs that congregate during the winter, clinging to eucalyptus and pine branches to find protection from the cold and wind.

Monarch numbers have been dwindling for decades in Pacific Grove, said Caleb Schneider, the city's environmental programs manager and manager of the Pacific Grove Monarch Butterfly Sanctuary, and he believes the ill-timed fires contributed to last year's decline.

"In 1997 there were 45,000 butterflies at our sanctuary, and now there's zero," Schneider said. "I've been here six years, and I never got a chance to see what butterfly clustering in Pacific Grove really looked like — where historically the branches were getting ripped off the trees because there were so many butterflies. I'm watching the extinction of a natural phenomenon."

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service announced in December that while the monarch butterfly meets the criteria to be listed as an endangered species, it isn't being added to the list because the agency must first complete plans to save 161 other endangered species. Basically, the agency is required to address those other species first, and it doesn't have resources to do more.

The agency will review the monarch's status each year "until it is no longer a candidate," the announcement said. "Our conservation goal is to improve monarch populations, and we encourage everyone to join the effort."

Bottom line: Right now, folks, it's up to us.

Good news: There are things we can do as individuals, from creating habitats in our yards and windowsills to lobbying our leaders.

Frustrating news: You may need to rip out the milkweed plants you thought were helping.

Here's why:

Monarch caterpillars eat only one plant — milkweed — and many Californians have planted the showy tropical milkweed (Asclepias curassavica) to help. Indeed, most SoCal nurseries offer only tropical milkweed, a handsome nonnative plant with feathery purplish-green leaves and deep orange flowers.

But well-meaning gardeners who plant this kind of milkweed are actually harming, not helping.

The problem is that tropical milkweed doesn't die back during the winter in temperate climates like Southern California's, according to the Xerces Society for Invertebrate Conservation. That permits protozoa parasites (Ophryocystis elektroscirra, or OE) to multiply on the plants, which are eaten by the caterpillars when they hatch.

When the caterpillars consume too many OE parasites, scientists believe it sickens and weakens adult monarchs, messing up their migration patterns, mating success, flight ability and lifespan. And having milkweed that blooms through the winter also disrupts the butterfly's migration patterns, experts say.

In other words, those evergreen tropical milkweed do more harm than good in Southern California, says Ron Vanderhoff, general manager of Roger's Gardens nursery in Corona del Mar. That's why the nursery stopped selling tropical milkweed a couple of years ago.

Moreover, the nursery has started a milkweed exchange program. When native milkweeds are available in the spring, Roger's Gardens will provide a free native milkweed plant to customers who bring in a tropical milkweed they've pulled from their yard (only one free plant per person).

Vanderhoff said he understands how hard it is to pull out established plants that seem to be helping butterflies. "Monarchs are a very emotional topic with many people, and there is a large and vocal audience of folks who think they are doing the right thing," he wrote in an email to The Times. "It's a lot like feeding ducks a bag of breadcrumbs every Tuesday at the local park. The ducks love it and it 'feels' like you are really doing a loving and wonderful thing, but you are not. You are harming the ducks."

If you can't bear to pull out your tropical milkweed, cut it down to the ground around Thanksgiving and keep it trimmed low until April to kill any overwintering parasites, said Travis Longcore, urban ecologist and science director for the Urban Wildlands Group.

And don't despair. Here are six things individuals can do to help monarchs survive and thrive. For more information, check out the Xerces Society's guide "Western Monarchs Are in Trouble. This Is How You Can Help."

1. Grow native milkweed

Check with garden centers, especially native plant nurseries, to see when their native milkweed goes on sale — generally in April. Check the Western Monarch Milkweed Mapper and plant varieties native to your area. You don't need a yard to do this. You can do this in pots on a balcony, window sill or front porch. The most prominent native varieties sold in Southern California include narrow-leaf milkweed (Asclepias fascicularis), with clusters of tiny pink flowers, California milkweed (Asclepias californica), with purplish flower clusters, and woolly-pod milkweed (Asclepias eriocarpa), with hairy pinkish or ivory buds. You can also purchase seed and sow in a prepared garden bed or container in late winter or very early spring, especially before a rain, since milkweed germinates poorly when it's hot. Sowing tip: Mix these small seeds with sand to make them easier to disperse.

2. Make sure it's organic

Anyone who's grown milkweed knows the plants are a magnet for bright orange aphids, so much so that some wholesale growers use systemic pesticides to produce lovely bug-free plants, Vanderhoff said. The problem is that homeowners take their plants home, unaware they're laced with pesticides that will be toxic to any caterpillars that eat them. "There is no way to look at a plant in a nursery and tell if it's been treated or not," he said, so seek out organically grown plants.

3. Lobby your garden center

If enough people start asking for native milkweed and stop buying the tropical variety, nurseries will respond. Just remember you can't buy native milkweed in the winter because it's dormant, so ask for seed too.

4. Plant lots of nectar flowers

Unlike the one-plant caterpillar, adult monarchs happily sip the nectar from many flowers. The Xerces Society has created a list of monarch nectar plants for Southern California that includes drought-tolerant natives attractive to many butterflies, such as black sage, blue dicks, sunflowers, seaside fleabane and the dainty fairy-cap flowers of manzanita. Another good choice: native buckwheats, whose flowers support a number of pollinators. And again, you don't need a yard to do this.

5. Don't try to "rescue"

monarchs

Scientists are still trying to understand how monarchs know when and where to migrate each year, but they have found that butterflies raised indoors seem to lose their innate navigation system and can't migrate properly, said Urban Wildlands' Longcore. So if you raise monarchs, put the enclosure outdoors. The same applies to moving monarchs from one location to another in the hopes of helping their survival, Schneider said. "We've had people literally pick up monarchs in the Bay Area and drive them down to our sanctuary [in Pacific Grove] to release them, but by manually migrating them you might be doing more harm than good," he said, by introducing diseases to the wild population and further disorienting the butterflies.

6. Don't use pesticides or herbicides

Milkweed used to grow wild in agricultural areas or alongside roads, but the use of herbicides to kill weeds has destroyed much of the monarch's food source, said Longcore. The advent of genetically modified crops that can withstand herbicides has made it easier for farmers to get rid of weeds, but it's also wiped out beneficial "weeds" that support pollinators such as butterflies and bees. Longcore said insecticides such as neonicotinoids — designed to kill sap-sucking insects such as aphids — appear harmful to butterflies and other pollinators, since the toxic residue accumulates in the pollen and nectar of treated plants. The best action, he said, is to avoid using these chemicals in our yards.

"We're poisoning our insects away, but the system doesn't work without them," Schneider said. "Unless you want to teach hundreds of thousands of kindergartners to go around with paintbrushes and sample pollen from one flower to another, it's not going to work."

TIME EXTENSION AND FIRST AMENDMENT TO SAKIOKA FARMS DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT (DA-99-02), SAKIOKA LOT 2, 14850 SUNFLOWER AVENUE

The Costa Mesa Planning Commission will hold a public hearing via Zoom webinar to consider an Ordinance to adopt First Amendment to Development Agreement 99-02 (DA-20-03) for a proposed amendment to the original Development Agreement established for Sakioka Farms Lot 2 (33 acres) to include minor modifications and clarifications to ensure consistency with the 2015-2035 General Plan and North Costa Mesa Specific Plan, as amended, and to allow for a 10 to 15 year time extension. The proposed amendment would be approved as part of the amended Development Agreement between Roy K. Sakioka & Sons and the City of Costa Mesa. The term of the existing Development Agreement expires on May 15, 2021.

The undersigned or its predecessor caused said Notice of Default and Election to Sell to be recorded in the county where the real property is located. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call (844) 477-7869 or visit this Internet Web site WWW.STOXPOSTING.COM, using the file number assigned to this case 091576-CA. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. NOTICE TO TENANT: Effective January 1, 2021, you may have a right to purchase this property after the trustee auction pursuant to Section 2924m of the California Civil Code. If you are an "eligible tenant buyer," you can purchase the property if you match the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. If you are an "eligible bidder," you may be able to purchase the property if you exceed the last and highest bid placed at the trustee auction. There are three steps to exercising this right of purchase. First, 48 hours after the date of the trustee sale, you can call (855) 313-3319, or visit this internet website www.clearreconcorp.com, using the file number assigned to this case 091576-CA to find the date on which the trustee's sale was held, the amount of the last and highest bid, and the address of the trustee. Second, you must send a written notice of intent to place a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 15 days after the trustee's sale. Third, you must submit a bid so that the trustee receives it no more than 45 days after the trustee's sale. If you think you may qualify as an "eligible tenant buyer" or "eligible bidder," you should consider contacting an attorney or appropriate real estate professional immediately for advice regarding this potential right to purchase. COSTA MESA council members considered a proposal to add 7.5 full-time positions to oversee the enforcement, regulation and processing of new retail cannabis businesses.

and potentially conduct criminal investigations related to new dispensaries. The officers would also assist with community policing and patrols.

The proposal amounts to an additional 7.5 full-time positions at an annual expense of $1,184,572. Molina said that figure is less than what other cities with similar laws have already committed to spending.

Santa Ana, for example, has added 10.5 full-time employees, including five police officers, while Long Beach has funded 8.5 full-time positions. Both cities have capped the number of allowable retail cannabis businesses at 30.

Mayor Pro Tem Andrea Marr asked how the Costa Mesa Police Department would recruit new officers, when current staffing levels are under what's been budgeted for the department.

Chief Bryan Glass acknowledged the department is operating with a total of 132 staff members, just under the 136 staff members budgeted, with 117 actively working. Still, he said, new officers would be needed to handle a heavier workload associated with regulating dispensaries.

"There's going to be a higher expectation, a higher demand than what we're even doing at this point going forward," he said. "We're going to need a more direct, more aggressive approach where we're going to have to have some of this (personnel) dedicated."

Farrell Harrison acknowledged since Costa Mesa voters passed Measure X in 2016, which allows for cannabis distribution, testing and manufacturing in an industrial zone, nine businesses have been established.

Overseeing those, while addressing the 16 illegal dispensaries currently in operation, is a burden staff have undertaken without additional personnel. The proposed recommendations, she said, would help handle that and up to 20 new businesses.

"This is not just about the new businesses that are coming online," Farrell Harrison said. "It's about the current context and framework we're operating in with Measure X [and] illegal dispensaries."

Councilman Jeff Harlan suggested staff research grant funding the city might be able to secure to help with upfront and on-going costs.

"This is a huge economic development opportunity for us, and by really being at the forefront here in the county, I think we may be well positioned," he said before the session adjourned.
