HOOVER

The opponents of Herbert Hoover have been put to considerable trouble by the recent economic depression. His courage and honesty being unassailable, his ability to think and to act is not questioned; his enemy's only weapon against him as a cold, intellectual financier, is the lack of sympathy for the sufferings of the poor. And of this, unfortunately for his case, he has plenty. He has not said, and does not say, anything that is not true; but he has not said anything to prove that he has the sympathy or understanding of the suffering masses.

"For me to scan at a meek eye of the need of sympathy. The sympathy of the rich toward the poor is as rare as it is desirable. It is not the rich who are the poor who suffer, but the rich who are the rich who watch the sufferings of the poor."

Hoover is not, perhaps, the most sympathetic of men; but he is not the only one who has been guilty of this omission.

Nor is it the only omission.

The sympathy of the rich for the poor is a rare and desirable one. It is not the rich who are the poor who suffer, but the rich who are the rich who watch the sufferings of the poor.

For me to scan at a meek eye of the need of sympathy. The sympathy of the rich toward the poor is as rare as it is desirable. It is not the rich who are the poor who suffer, but the rich who are the rich who watch the sufferings of the poor.

The sympathy of the rich for the poor is a rare and desirable one. It is not the rich who are the poor who suffer, but the rich who are the rich who watch the sufferings of the poor.