FLOOR MANAGER at Toast Kitchen + Bakery Bar puts together meals to be delivered as part of a new program called Delivering with Dignity OC.

Group delivers meals to those most impacted by COVID-19

BY SARA CARDINE

A newly formed army of local nonprofits, donors, agencies and volunteers are teaming up with Orange County restaurants with a single mission in mind — to deliver some 5,000 fresh meals each week to those hit hardest by the coronavirus pandemic.

Members of the collaboration Delivering with Dignity Orange County are combining their vast public and private networks and resources to find individuals and families most in need, wherever they are, and provide them the comfort and care of a warm meal.

The group's first delivery, 150 meals prepared by staff at Toast Kitchen + Bakery in Costa Mesa, took place Wednesday as a line of volunteer drivers loaded bags of spaghetti Bolognese, salad, chicken and mashed potatoes into their backseats and took off in all directions.

The effort could not have come at a more crucial time.

The Orange County Health Agency on Wednesday reported 26 new deaths from the coronavirus and 363 hospitalizations, the highest levels since reporting began. Conversely, the county's testing rates fell Wednesday to a record low. Only 1,478 tests were reported — less than

Vacation rentals back on island

The Newport Beach City Council lifts the moratorium, but only if guests commit to four-night stays.

BY HILLARY DAVIS

Newport Island will continue to have a different set of regulations compared to the rest of the city when it comes to vacation rentals.

The City Council voted Tuesday to lift a pandemic-driven moratorium on short-term lodging on the small residential island, but with the caveat that all vacationers stay for at least four nights.

The current minimum stay elsewhere in Newport, also in response to the coronavirus pandemic, is three nights to reduce visitor churn during the continuing public health crisis.

The council put a six-week moratorium on all 1,500 of the city's vacation rentals in April, which it mostly lifted last month — except on Newport Island, which had been especially impacted by an influx of vacation rental conversions even before the coronavirus crisis.

The island, tucked into the northwest corner of Newport Harbor, only has about 20 homes permitted for short-term rentals.

It has about 110 homes overall, with tight lots, narrow streets and limited curbside parking. The vacation rentals have mostly cropped up over the past two years, and neighbors have been vocal about what they see as a sharp blow to the island's tranquility.

The council also approved a package of citywide vacation home reforms that it has been discussing for several months. These include higher fines for scofflaws, contracting with a 24-hour answering service to take neighbor complaints, and, pending Planning Commission input, maximum occupancy rules and a requirement that every rental unit have a parking space.

Councilman Jeff Herdman, who helped craft the latest general update, said that by implementing stiffer fines and being more con-

Laguna to relax permitting and parking standards for new businesses downtown

BY LILLY NGUYEN

In a 4-1 vote, the Laguna Beach City Council on June 16 moved to relax regulations for new businesses in the Downtown Specific Plan, a document that guides the growth, design and development standards of downtown Laguna Beach.

With Councilwoman Toni Iseman dissenting, members moved to amend some of the components of the Downtown Specific Plan to limit the requirement of a conditional use permit to businesses that have the potential to impact surrounding neighborhoods such as restaurants that serve alcohol, bars and souvenir shops. All other commercial uses would be considered permit-by-right.

Parking regulations will also be relaxed, with city staff saying that "many of the buildings in the downtown [area] were not originally developed with on-site parking, and as such, cannot accommodate new uses that would potentially increase the parking requirement" in a staff report prepared for the meeting.

The City Council first reviewed the plan in December.

Formal adoption of the changes is tentatively scheduled for July 28.

At least a dozen people commented, arguing both in favor and against the changes under consideration.

Some spoke in support of both amendments, while others argued against the relaxation of the parking restrictions. Some asked that the council delay the conversation until residents can participate in person.

The change decreases the number of parking spaces required for certain nonresidential uses such

Parents protest Perry closure as district superintendent resigns

BY MATT SZABO

About 100 parents and children from Perry Elementary School in Huntington Beach gathered at the campus Tuesday evening, protesting its closure.

At about the same time across town, Huntington Beach City School District leadership was in the process of changing.

The school board accepted the resignation of Supt. Gregg Haulk at Tuesday night's meeting, effective Aug. 1.

Haulk is retiring after nine years and former Buena Park Supt. Greg Magnuson will take interim duties, according to a release.

In a letter posted on the district website, Haulk, 58, cited school modernization and upgrades as a result of Measure Q's passage as a highlight of his tenure.

It also wasn't without controversy.

On April 29, the HBCSD board of trustees unanimously voted to close Joseph R. Perry Elementary School, which has been open since 1965.

The school, at 19231 Harding Lane, is more than 40% Latino and about 49% low-income families, unlike many of the other elementary schools in the district.

Several of the parents at Tuesday's protest expressed frustration that the closure happened in the midst of the coronavirus pandemic, and that communication regarding the closure was presented solely in English, not Spanish as well.

Comments of several speakers at the protest, including event organizer and Perry parent Kurt Chrestensen and fellow organizer Oscar Rodriguez, were translated into both languages.

Protesters, who were all wearing masks, then marched in a loop along Garfield Avenue, south on Beach Boulevard and back on Yorktown Avenue before returning to the school.

Valeria Espinoza, who is a Perry Panther alumna, said she recently learned that her son Aaron, a first-grader next year, would be transferred to Seaclyff Elementary.

Espinoza started a petition and said she has been calling the school district a couple of times a

THE LAGUNA BEACH Planning Commission recommended denial of a proposed remodel of the inn in October 2017, but staff reports said that the project has been significantly scaled back.

Discussion for Coast Inn remodel delayed to July by Laguna Beach City Council

BY LILLY NGUYEN

Plans for a remodel at Coast Inn will be delayed another month after the Laguna Beach City Council postponed discussion to July 28, in a 4-1 vote with Councilwoman Toni Iseman dissenting, to provide staff more time to analyze new details. The restaurant at the inn on 1401 S. Coast Hwy. would be able to operate without a conditional use permit. Conditional use permits were not required at the time the structure was built, Community Development Director Marc Wiener said. The project has been stuck in city development channels, having first been introduced at a concept review to the Heritage Committee in 2015. It was initially scheduled to come before the City Council in April, but the hearing was postponed due to the COVID-19 pandemic.

Initial proposals for the project included historic structure restoration, upper level additions, elevated decks, a new 3,707-square-foot pool, spa and deck area, air conditioning equipment and art in public places and landscaping, a staff report prepared for Tuesday's meeting said. Expanding restaurant services to the rooftop would require acquisition of a conditional use permit, which would establish occupancy limits and hours of operation to mitigate potential impacts on neighbors.

Wiener said the city was notified Monday that the project developers no longer wanted to provide food service on the rooftop deck. Developers also raised the question of whether the city could impose conditional use requirements on the restaurant now that its services were no longer being expanded.

Wiener also said that project developers would like to open up access to the rooftop for hotel guests to bring other guests or associates.

The proposed conditional use permit for the remodel limits rooftop access to guests only. Wiener said expanding access and occupancy of the deck could make it difficult to apply some of the California Environmental Quality Act exemptions necessary for the remodel.

Property owner Chris Dornin said Tuesday that he and the city were in agreement to limit occupancy of the rooftop deck to the maximum number of hotel guests only, but that it was not financially viable to have security guards checking the IDs of visitors to ensure they were guests of the 24-room hotel.

The hotel has a maximum guest occupancy of 96, city staff said.

City staff said the project would require a new analysis and recommended to City Council that discussion on the project be tentatively delayed to October or to return the project to the Planning Commission in August.

"A lot of these changes happened just yesterday afternoon or evening and today, so I don't believe that the staff has had the time to appropriately analyze them. The city attorney [Philip Kohn] needs additional time as well to review some of the legal arguments that have been made," City Manager John Pietig said. Dornin said Tuesday that it was "frustrating that we're being stuck in a city process," describing it as erroneous and in need of greater collaboration.

"A year ago, we decided to scale the project way, way back as a result of the City Council hearing and the subcommittee hearing," Dornin said. "When we were preparing for our City Council hearing in February, we submitted a letter articulating that. There's two entities here that are completely separate."

The majority of speakers called for the City Council to delay the discussion and described the project as a "moving target," with Iseman saying that she wanted to see it returned to the Planning Commission. Discussion will be continued until the July 28 council meeting, which will change the date for a planned discussion on the second reading for amendments to the Downtown Specific Plan to July 21.

Councilman Peter Blake said he felt the council should hear the project before sending it back to the Planning Commission.

"In reality, we all know this is going to get appealed back to Coastal [Commission] and it's also going to be fought in the courts over CEQA," Blake said.

Blake said he wanted the City Council to approve the project from their "comfort zone" and allow the project to go through the courts and the state before it returns to the council to determine whether or not the project should return to the Planning Commission.

He added he was willing to hear the project Tuesday night.

one-third of the county's June 17 peak testing day.

Health officials qualified the high number of deaths on the agency's Twitter page, saying "a concentrated effort was made to compare death certificates received from the County Office of Vital Records to existing cases" in the state's reporting system, which resulted in a higher-than-usual count.

Still, the California Health Department reports 90 fatalities occurring in Orange County in the last 14 days alone, as a recent Los Angeles Times data analysis identified the county as one of four responsible for contributing to a recent statewide spike in hospitalizations.

Karen Williams, president and chief executive of 211 OC, a nonprofit that connects vulnerable people with vital social services and resources, said the impact of coronavirus has been devastating in how it has compounded already serious problems. That's why the group is glad to partner with Delivering with Dignity to identify clients who could benefit from an emergency meal service.

"One of the things we've seen with COVID-19 is an increase in food insecurity," Williams said. "People are at risk or are exposed to [the virus] or have had it and have to do social isolation — how do you get groceries?"

Meals provided by Delivering with Dignity are created by participating local restaurants for $6 that, when multiplied by 200 or 300 meals, allows business owners to recoup losses and re-hire staff members.

The collaboration came to Orange County courtesy of Tustin resident Daniel Kim, founder of the nonprofit Dragon Kim Foundation. He saw the same program operating in Las Vegas and thought his home community could benefit from its win-win-win approach.

Kim explained Delivering with Dignity is intended to serve people who meet three key criteria — they are at the highest risk for coronavirus, ineligible for or not being served by other food delivery programs and are financially unable to meet their food needs without leaving home and have no social network upon which to rely.

But recipients aren't the only ones who are helped, Kim said. Local agencies and nonprofits benefit from the program by better serving the needs of the clients they serve, while local businesses are able to recoup from the losses they've suffered during the coronavirus shutdown.

"It's a very elegant solution to address a lot of problems," Kim said of the Delivering with Dignity model.

So far, the effort has raised about $150,000, enough to prepare about 28,000 meals, at $6 for an individual meal and $22 for a family meal, Kim estimated.

The goal is to deliver some 5,000 meals each week to people in Costa Mesa, Anaheim and Santa Ana over the next six weeks — or possibly longer if interested agencies and volunteers continue to coalesce the way it has in just the past few weeks.

Jack Toan, who works as vice president of philanthropy and community relations for Wells Fargo and was brought into the collaboration by friend Kim, says he thinks the program could grow.

"We definitely want to figure out how to increase the sustainability, because I think we'll see the need well beyond six weeks," Toan said. "There are a lot of food programs, but they have a lot of limitations, and there are people falling through the cracks."

Toast Kitchen + Bakery owner John Park estimated his 2-year-old business is currently operating at about 25% capacity to keep diners distanced. So, when he heard about Delivering with Dignity, he was happy to help. "My faith is really important to me, and I believe it's our duty to do this," said Park, who regularly attends NewSong Church in Santa

Ana with Toan and Kim. "This is what I'm supposed to do."

Bronnie Lee, who owns Wasa Sushi & Teppan in Newport Beach and used his industry experience to enlist help bring other restaurateurs to Delivering with Dignity, agrees. "We're just so blessed to have such an amazing partnership with these restaurants," Lee said. "I'm just thrilled to be a part of it."

The program is funded through donations from the Sun Family Foundation, Sisters of St. Joseph Health Care Foundation, Anaheim Community Foundation, Wells Fargo and others. Volunteer deliveries are organized by OneOC and the Dragon Kim Foundation.

sistent about enforcement, "these units that are having such a negative impact on quality of life are basically going to eliminate themselves."

Gary Cruz, a second-generation island resident, said the rules need enforcing. He likened the soft touch he said police take on children leaping from the island's access bridge over Newport Harbor to the enforcement on problem vacationers. This indicates that irritating behavior can slide if nobody catches it, he said.

"If they're partying and the police come in and say, 'Don't party anymore,' then they come back two hours later and they have to do it again, you're kind of approving bad behavior," Cruz said. "That's what I think we're trying to stop."

Megan Cooper, who lives in one half of a Newport Island duplex she owns with a friend, rents out the other unit with the assistance of a professional management firm. She said some vacation home reforms make sense, but she said she struggled with feeling like Newport Island is being unfairly singled out.

Lori Bowman, who rents out an island home that has been in her family for more than 80 years, had a similar stance.

"The reasons given for keeping the ban in effect on the island — parking problems, density of homes, narrow streets, disturbances by short-term renters — are the same problems that all the other areas in Newport Beach have experienced with short-term lodging," she said.

But resident Thomas Horton said the impacts are worse than on nearby Balboa Peninsula, one of Newport's historic tourism nodes, because of the island's unique layout — its triangle shape and single point of ingress.

"If you go there it's super obvious," he said.

Joe Bowerbank said there are some good operators — and some who aren't. He said the island has changed so much in the 10 years he's rented a home there full-time that he's now unsure if he wants to buy the property from his landlord.

"I've seen vomit, I've seen body parts, I've seen things I didn't see when I moved there in 2010," he said.

Mayor Will O'Neill voted against the Newport Island minimum stay because he doesn't think Newport Island should be treated differently, or that the mechanism used to carve out that difference — an emergency ordinance pinned to the coronavirus pandemic — was appropriate.

"It's three nights everywhere else in the city," he said. "I have no idea why adding a fourth night would somehow fix an emergency situation during a virus."

as offices, retail and food service to three spaces for every 1,000 square feet of gross floor area.

The new rule counters current regulations that require one space for every 250 square feet of gross floor area for general retail and one space for every 100 square feet of gross floor area for food service usage.

Iseman raised concerns about the permit-by-right process, arguing that the council should have greater discretion over what kinds of uses should be available in the downtown area. Iseman pointed to the possibility of chain stores, saying, "How can we get visitors to shop if what we have is what they have at home?"

Discussion focused on whether or not downtown vacancies would even be attractive to potential chain stores, with the specific language and requirements guiding uses and parking. The parking modifications will apply to all existing buildings, Community Development Director Marc Wiener said.

The Planning Commission recommended the council consider modifying current permit requirements and relaxing parking requirements in the downtown area at their meeting on Feb. 26 after review of a study done by consultants Stanley R. Hoffman Associates and Stoffel Associates.

"When I was elected to council in November 2012, I think ... it was February 2013 that I was in the city manager's office asking if we could undertake a review of the Downtown Specific Plan and here we are, what, seven years later and this is the first item that council is going to vote on," Mayor Bob Whalen said.

"I think it's gone through a very robust process, a very positive process," Whalen said, adding that he supports both amendments.

"I was on the Planning Commission for four years before getting on council and I thought that at that time that ... the concept of micromanaging the contents of a store was kind of crazy," Whalen said. "You knew a lot of times that what you were mandating was either going to be ignored somehow or lead to a business model that wasn't successful."

"That's just way too much focus and control for us to have as a city," Whalen said.

Housing, building height and parcel merger requirements for the Downtown Specific Plan will be addressed separately with the Housing Element update.

"I don't want [Aaron] coming home crying, or kids not wanting to play with him. We're doing everything we can and we're not giving up on this." At the time of the vote, district officials said that the closure would help the district absorb $6.8 million in projected budget cuts and was justified by declining enrollment. A school consolidation task force committee, chaired by Magnuson, voted 7-4 on April 12 to recommend Perry for closure, despite a previous task force unanimously determining in 2019 that Perry should not be closed. Perry, the only elementary school in the northeast portion of the district, also is unique demographically. The percentages of Latino and low-income families are more than double that of any other district elementary school. "There were cuts that had to be made," district spokesman John Ashby said. "Teachers were unfortunately laid off, and classified staff. It's been a really tough year within the district on top of the COVID stuff." Ashby said the board was open to taking more thoughts and comments, but that the district plans to move forward with the closure of Perry and relocating Perry families to the other

"Perry was not chosen based on its demographics. There's a lot that goes into the closing of a school ... and there was a healthy discussion within the committee." "The data that people want to see is just in regard to the demographic set, but Perry also had the lowest enrollment we had across the school district. People will definitely talk about the transfer policies and how families were able to transfer out of that school, and that was part of the discussion, but ultimately the board of trustees made the decision unanimously to close Perry." Perry parent Luis Solis said he was never notified the school would be closed until the final Zoom meeting on April 29, when the final vote occurred. Solis went to Peterson Elementary in the district, but he said he doesn't think it's right that his son Paul will have to change schools when he enters first grade next year. "[Perry] connects with

ADVANTAGE TENNIS ACADEMY SWINGS BACK INTO ACTION

BY MATT SZABO

Temporarily closing the Advantage Tennis Academy in mid-March wasn't really ideal, but Jimmy Johnson didn't have a choice.

Advantage's home base of the Racquet Club of Irvine shut its doors when the novel coronavirus hit.

Johnson, who founded Advantage in 2003, just hoped to get his young athletes back on the court soon.

"Tennis kids just have got to hit a tennis ball," he said. "They go crazy [when they don't]."

When RCI reopened its 28-court facility in early May, so did Advantage — gradually. The program instituted a deal.

For $1,000, kids could come out and hit every day for four weeks, Advantage co-owner and tennis director Adrian Games said.

"It's kind of like that song, 'SexyBack,' but we were doing the 'Tennis Back' version of it," Games said. "That was our campaign."

Games said for multiple weeks, coaches would send three kids to a court for "two-on-one" drills. "That is great for the kids," Games said. "It's great for change of direction and consistency, and it just reminds you, the old grassroots, two-on-ones, how important they are. We've reinjected that into every program we can."

As Orange County started reopening again, so has Advantage. The program's summer camps began last week, and Games said the academy's top-tier program will be training at the Tennis Club Newport Beach. Advantage's preparatory program will stay at RCI.

Games, whose oldest daughter Leyden is a USC commit for women's tennis, has his younger daughters, Biella, 14, and Ade, 12, also enrolled at Advantage.

Practice time is crucial, especially with junior tennis tournaments still mostly off-court. The United States Tennis Assn. Junior Sectionals, typically played in June, have been rescheduled to begin July 25.

COVID-19 has negatively affected Advantage's international clientele who come to Orange County, though co-owner and director Mahmoud Karim is currently in his native Egypt launching ATA Egypt. Still, local players are happy to be back on court.

Jett Middleton, originally from Colorado, has been living in Newport Beach for the last four years. He is committed to play at the University of Arizona and attends Advantage full time. His Universal Tennis Rating, which has reached more than 12, makes him an elite junior player.

Middleton is coached by Johnson.

"The time that COVID took away from me actually really helped me," Middleton said. "Tennis is a really hard sport mentally, so you need rest. You get a lot of anxiety and worry that comes from tennis, so it was a good time to focus on my mental health and work hard on my fitness, kind of clean some details up. The few amount of times I was able to get on the court, I was able to work on details that I wouldn't normally be able to work on because of tournaments."

Advantage has meant a lot to the Di Giulio family, as brothers Joseph, Austin and now Perry have come through the program. Joseph went on to play for four years at UCLA and Austin now plays for Loyola Marymount, where his sophomore year of men's tennis got wiped out by the coronavirus this spring.

As for Perry, he attended Advantage full time this school year. That might change in the fall, when he'll be a high school freshman. Austin, who went to Advantage full time in high school, said he is pushing his younger brother to enroll at Corona del Mar High School.

"Looking back on it, I would have loved to play at least a year of high school tennis," Austin Di Giulio said. "It's really cool to get that team atmosphere before you go off to college. He loves tennis a lot, so that's good."

"I've trained here pretty much every day my entire life, before college. One of the cooler things in my eyes about Advantage is just all of the relationships I've been able to make with people from all around the world. I have really good friends from Egypt, France, just people you'd never be able to meet at a normal high school. I thought that was pretty cool, how I was able to kind of see all of these different cultures without leaving my backyard."

Not everyone has been attending Advantage full time since it reopened. Newport

Corona del Mar's Scott Giuliano headed to Harvard

BY MATT SZABO

Corona del Mar High junior tight end Scott Giuliano said he has committed to play football at Harvard University.

Giuliano becomes the program's first member of the class of 2021 to commit to play in college. Seven graduating seniors have committed or signed, including future Washington quarterback Ethan Garbers, the Daily Pilot Football Dream Team Player of the Year.

Giuliano, who is 6-foot-5 and 225 pounds, was the second tight end this past fall for CdM (16-0), helping the Sea Kings win the CIF Southern Section Division 3 and CIF State Division I-A titles.

He had nine catches for 90 yards and a touchdown, and the touchdown catch came in the final game, a 35-27 win over San Mateo Serra for the state championship.

"He proved to be an exceptional blocker in the run game, a substantial receiving threat in the pass game, and picked up the nuances of the tight end position so very quickly," CdM coach Dan O'Shea said in a text message.

"We look forward to him becoming a featured part of our 2020 offense at CdM, while becoming a rising leader within our program as a scholar and outstanding man of character."

Giuliano indeed projects to see his role increase if the Sea Kings can play this fall.

Estancia's Jake Covey signs with New Mexico State

BY ANDREW TURNER

Estancia High graduating senior Jake Covey has signed with the New Mexico State baseball program.

One of the most recognizable faces on campus, Covey was a four-year varsity letterman in both baseball and basketball.

Covey said he was "super pumped up," but also relieved to finally have the recruiting process completed.

The 6-foot-3, 180-pound right-handed pitcher said that Mike Cosgrove, his coach in travel ball with the SoCal Birds, introduced him to an interested member of the New Mexico State program.

In closing the deal, Covey said that the most important thing to him was that it would be an enjoyable team atmosphere. There would be no issues in enjoying the game itself.

"I wanted to make sure that I would enjoy the team and enjoy the culture," Covey said. "I love baseball, and I'm going to enjoy that every time, and I'm always going to be giving it my best, but the only thing that could really kill a place for me is if I just hated the team."

"I talked to some of the players about the coaches and their schedule, and I talked with the coaches about the team ... I guess we just got all the right answers."

Covey said he is going to try to go as far as he can in baseball. His backup plan is also an ambitious one. He said he plans to study biology, and if baseball does not pan out, he wants to go to medical school with the goal of becoming a trauma surgeon.

"My parents, we've talked a lot about kind of the backup [plan], and through Estancia's medical pathway, I really found that I love that, too," Covey said.

In calling up his favorite high school memories, Covey was able to cut the list down to a top two.

For basketball, he looked at his senior season. He was named a Daily Pilot Boys' Basketball Dream Team selection after leading the Eagles to an undefeated Orange Coast League title and a trip to the CIF Southern Section Division 5AA quarterfinals. Covey was also named to the South roster for the Orange County All-Star basketball game.

Laguna Beach baseball will cherish the memories

BY MATT SZABO

It wasn't too early to say that the Laguna Beach High baseball team was building toward one of the best seasons in the 82-year history of the program.

The Breakers won their first eight games, including the Newport Elks Tournament Costa Mesa Division title, before suffering a 16-4 Sunset Conference crossover game loss to CIF Southern Section Division 1 powerhouse Huntington Beach.

Laguna Beach, which won its lone CIF title in program history when it captured the 2016 Division 4 crown, was the top-ranked team in Division 3.

What did come far too early for the Breakers was the sudden ending of the season. They didn't know at the time that the March 9 defeat at the hands of the Oilers would be the final game of their 2020 campaign.

Later that week, the Laguna Beach Unified School District joined other local districts in canceling athletic events until further notice. On April 3, the CIF officially canceled spring sports championships.

"The very first announcement, the guys were kind of worried about it, but they wanted to keep working," Breakers coach Jeff Sears said. "That's this group. They didn't want to stop working. They took home their Driveline jump, they took home their turf ropes, stuff that they could get their workout in."

"But when [the final announcement] finally came down, it was really hard for them because this group really loved each other. They played for each other, they cared about each other. This was probably one of the best teams that bought into our team concept that I've coached in the eight years that I've coached at Laguna Beach High School. They accepted roles and they wanted the best for everybody."

Laguna Beach had 11 seniors that will graduate. Three of them — four-year catcher Aidan Booth (Claremont-McKenna), left-handed pitcher/first baseman Aidan Kidd (New Jersey Institute of Technology) and right-handed pitcher Jackson Yelland (Kenyon College) have secured futures in college baseball.

Junior right-handed pitcher/shortstop Eric Silva, a UCLA commit, was slated to be the Breakers' ace. But the week before the season began, Silva tweaked the same right shoulder he injured last year.

Silva closed out the team's 4-3 season-opening win over Beckman as part of a double-header sweep, but Kidd moved into the No. 1 starter role with Yelland as the No. 2 starter.

Pitching coach Jairo Ochoa helped Kidd finish the season

3-0 with a 1.53 earned-run average, and 24 strikeouts in just 18½ innings pitched. Yelland was 3-1 with a 2.62 ERA.

"The kids really bought into coach Ochoa and his style of pitching, and they became pitchers this year," Sears said. "That was different than in the past. I've had unbelievable throwers; these guys pitched."

Sears, who is 143-80 in eight years in charge of the Breakers from 2008-11 and since 2017, saw success stories everywhere he turned.

Coast residents Jazmine Aftabi, 14, and Lillia Edalat, 13, said they each attend a few times a week.

Jazmine and Lillia, who will be incoming freshmen at Sage Hill School and Corona del Mar High this fall, hope to improve before entering high school tennis.

"We come as often as we can," Jazmine said.

The program is gearing back up again for summer, which is good news for local tennis players.

Jagger Leach, 13, is a Laguna Beach resident and the son of former women's tennis star Lindsay Davenport.

He's another top local player who sometimes trains at Advantage.

"We just want to create pathways for all of these kids," Adrian Games said. "They have a common mission, a common goal. They all talk about wanting to go pro, but let's be honest. The big thing we try to help these kids with is getting them into college, having a pathway to college and developing a tennis game in an atmosphere that's safe, challenging and pushes them."

his sophomore year, when he started a second-place tiebreaker game against rival Costa Mesa in the Battle for the Bell. Not only did Estancia clinch second place with a 7-4 victory, but it also claimed the All-Sports Cup by virtue of the victory.

In his last full season of high school baseball, Covey was named a Dream Team first-team selection. He garnered Orange Coast League Pitcher of the Year honors, finishing his junior year with an 8-1 record and a 0.37 earned run average. He notched 109 strikeouts over 76½ innings that season.

Giuliano, who plans to study economics at Harvard, said he was impressed with the school during an unofficial visit in February with his parents, Andrea and Jeff.

"I felt that they took their time to get to know me as a player, a student and a person," Giuliano said.

"I just really felt welcome there, and obviously the academics are world-class there. I really wanted to take that opportunity."

Senior center fielder Nolan Smith, who hit just .246 as a junior, was batting an even .500 to lead the team.

"He didn't hit very well last year, but he bought into what we do and how we do it," Sears said. "He figured out that he was fast, and he bought into small ball. That kind of helped."

Senior second baseman Charlie Pillsbury was hitting .452 with team-best totals of 13 runs scored and 12 runs batted in, while Booth had a cool .440 average.

Right fielder Christian Holm, first baseman Jeremy Hayes, left fielder Will Potratz, James Loughlin, Enzo Sanchez and Brooks Hogenauer were the other seniors for the Breakers.

Laguna Beach hoped for a Wave League title after finishing tied for third in the four-team league during an injury-riddled 2019, which ended with the Breakers failing to make the postseason.

"We enjoyed doing everything together on the baseball team, at school, in our free time," Yelland said.

"We knew we had a lot of talent going into the year, but I think the close connection is what really made our team special. It really felt like this team could have made a run at something, because of that close chemistry. It really felt like this was our year."

Kidd agreed that he would miss the camaraderie that the team had on and off the field.

"There were 11 seniors, and I feel like we all grew as people," Kidd said.

"Coach Sears did a really good job of making us better men, preparing us for our future. I feel like what we gained in that aspect was the best thing about our time together."
