Child under age 5 dies of COVID-19 in Orange County

The youngster died in August, the health agency says, and is the second pediatric death in the county from the disease.

BY RONG-GONG LIN II, LUKE MONEY

A second child has died of COVID-19 in Orange County.

The child, who was under the age of 5, died in August, the Orange County Health Care Agency said Friday.

The first pediatric death in COVID-19 in Orange County was announced in August 2020, and was that of a teenage girl who had underlying medical conditions.

Pediatric COVID-19 deaths remain rare, officials said. Of more than 25,000 total COVID-19 deaths in Los Angeles County, seven children have died in Los Angeles County — two among children under the age of 12, and five adolescents and teenagers age 12 to 17.

The best way to protect children too young to be vaccinated is to increase vaccination rates among the adults and teenagers around them. Officials in Orange County have said that, generally speaking, the children hospitalized for COVID-19 are not vaccinated — sometimes because they're not eligible for the vaccine — and neither are their families.

Vaccinations have been authorized for people age 12 and up.

Before Orange County announced the latest pediatric death, of the more than 66,000 COVID-19 deaths in California, 33 fatalities have been among children. Nine deaths were among those younger than 5, and the remaining 24 among children between age 5 and 17.

Nationwide, at least 500 children have died of COVID-19. The nation's cumulative COVID-19 death toll among people of all ages exceeds 654,000.

Orange County hospitalizations from COVID-19 are dropping

BY LILLY NGUYEN

Hospitalizations from COVID-19 are dropping in Orange County, according to data reported by the county's health-care agency Friday.

Officials said the seven-day average rate of coronavirus cases fell from 17.4 to 13.6 out of every 100,000 people between the period of Sept. 2 to 8, but data reported Friday indicated 16 cases out of every 100,000 people.

COVID-19 hospitalizations fell from 466 cases on Monday to 426 on Friday. But patients being cared for in intensive care units at area hospitals ticked up from 128 to 130.

Edison High School students, parents and staff on Friday morning remembered the 20th anniversary of the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks against the United States.

Edison Principal Jennifer Graves said that 500 American flags were planted at 6:45 a.m. before the start of classes, many of them in the bowl area in the center of campus as well as in front of the school.

Edison teacher Josh Bammer, a U.S. Army veteran, read a passage to recognize the occasion as well.

"We wanted to do something special," Graves said. "These students were all born after 9/11, but we want to make sure no one ever forgets."

Huntington Beach extends second block of Main Street closure for the rest of 2021

BY MATT SZABO

The Huntington Beach City Council unanimously voted Tuesday night to extend the closure of the second block of Main Street through the end of 2021.

Outdoor dining has been offered on the second block since last summer to stimulate restaurant and retail business.

In February, the closure was extended through Labor Day per the request of the Downtown Business Improvement District.

Now visitors will be able to enjoy outdoor dining through the end of the year.

The Downtown BID continues to support the second block closure, according to a staff report prepared by director of community development Ursula Luna-Reynosa. Though indoor dining is now back at full capacity, City Manager Oliver Chi advised the council that keeping the second block closed would be helpful not only because of the emergence of the Delta variant of the coronavirus, but also because the city is working on a more comprehensive reimagining of downtown Huntington Beach.

City Council members also discussed reclosing the third block of Main Street to street traffic, at least partially, with one-way traffic.

"If there isn't a closure, I do think that having the physical barriers and structures [between the second and third block] ... that's a concern to me," Councilwoman Natalie Moser said. "I know when I went down there, I sat there, and you could see people come up to it and stop."

Councilman Mike Posey, who lives downtown, agreed that the barriers represent a psychological impediment.

"What the third block is looking for is an extension of the energy that's experienced on the second block into the third block, without adversely affecting their neighbors across the street," Posey said. "I think there's probably some compromise that we can figure out as we develop a more comprehensive plan."

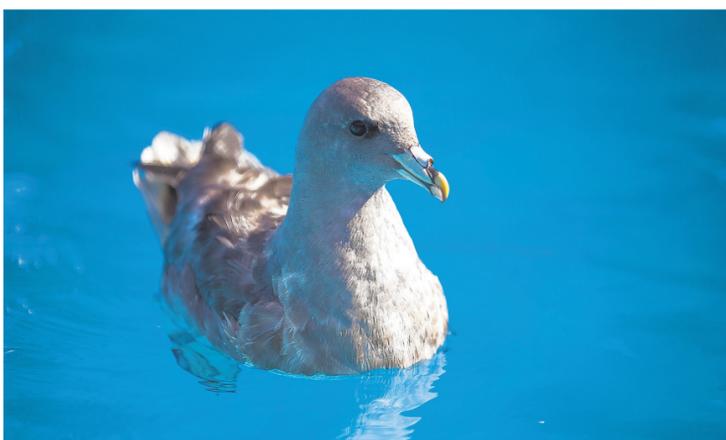

Chi said city staff will continue discussion with the third block businesses on a possible compromise plan.

"We're definitely looking to clean up the area and build some cohesion, even if we don't do anything to the street," he said.

Wildlife rescue group rehabs sub-arctic seabird mistaken for seagull

A NORTHERN FULMAR, rescued in Seal Beach, was first thought to be a seagull. The seabird is actually related to the albatross and can live up to 50 years.

A Huntington Beach wildlife rescue group on Friday hitched a ride on a whale-watching tour headed out of Newport Landing for the release of a special seabird which, three months earlier, was in a heap of trouble.

Debbie McGuire, executive director of the Wetlands and Wildlife Care Center, said her organization received a call on June 3 about a seagull that had been found in Seal Beach in critical condition.

Long Beach Animal Control officers explained the small bird was soaked to the bone and had a puncture wound on its neck that looked infected. Its feet were injured, and it appeared to be suffering from dehydration and hypothermia — could the care center take it?

Short answer: yes.

"We get all types of gulls—Western gulls, California gulls, Ring-billed gulls," McGuire explained of the nonprofit, which has for 49 years rehabbed all manner of wildlife. "We also get a lot of pelicans and cormorants ... shore birds, plovers, coots. We get several geese and ducks, too."

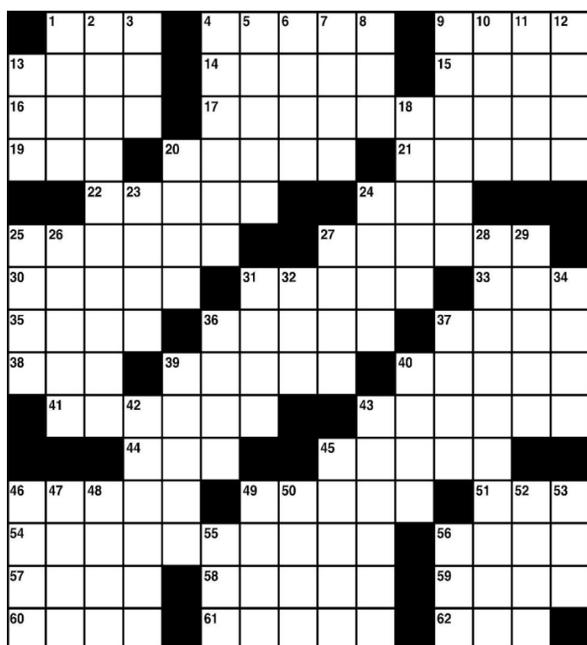

However, when the transport was made, WWCC staff members noticed something odd. The bird's upper bill was topped with nasal tubes, or naricornes. It wasn't a seagull at all — it was a northern fulmar.

A relative of albatrosses and petrels, the stout-bodied seabirds frequent subarctic regions of the Pacific Atlantic and Arctic oceans, where they feed over deep waters until migrating south later in the year.

"We get quite a few every year, about a few dozen, but usually we see them in the fall," McGuire said.

Using their powerful sense of smell, they sniff out squid, fish and crustaceans and largely remain at sea, returning to shore to breed on steep cliffs.

An incredibly long-lived species, some birds have been recorded living into their 50s.

But, without some serious intervention, the fulmar found on Seal Beach wouldn't be so lucky.

Wetlands and Wildlife Care Center performed multiple surgeries to repair the bird's neck wound, likely caused by a fishhook, rehydrated it and helped it re-waterproof its feathers.

McGuire explained seabirds have uropygial glands that produce a waxy substance that, through preening, coats their feathers.

A wound or a tear from a fishhook can rupture that natural barrier, allowing water infiltration that hinders flight.

The 600-gram bird recuperated at the Huntington Beach facility for three months before staff determined it was healthy enough to be released. However, because fulmars mainly live over deep waters, staff members needed to find a vessel.

Luckily, Davey's Locker Whale Watching & Sport Fishing had a tour leaving bright and early Friday morning.

So, rescuers boxed up the little bird (which staff had come to think of as female) and headed for Newport Beach.

"She was smelling the salt water, and the little box she was in was rocking more and more the further we got out," McGuire said of the journey.

"It was like she was saying, 'I'm ready!'"

About 3 miles from shore, it was time for the release. No sooner had the box opened when the little fulmar took to the sky.

She dived into the water for a quick drink, then sped off so fast staff members couldn't even photograph the occasion.

For McGuire, releases are the best part of her job.

"It just reaffirms why I'm doing this — because I want to get a healthy individual back into its environment," she added. "And that's what we were able to do today."

Newport Beach considers extension of emergency use permits for dining

BY LILLY NGUYEN

The Newport Beach City Council will be once again considering the extension of emergency temporary use permits issued at the start of the pandemic to businesses citywide that allow them to operate in parking lots, sidewalks and private and public property.

The issue arrives at the dais Tuesday just a little over two months since it was last discussed in June when council members voted to extend the life of said permits through Sept. 6, at which point business owners could apply for a limited-term permit dependent on the business' location, parking and land use compatibility. They would eventually be expected to amend their entitlements, typically through a conditional or minor use permit and, if in the coastal zone, a coastal development permit to make their outdoor dining or display permanent fixtures.

The aim, city staff said then, was to create a transitional period as businesses and restaurants recovered from the pandemic.

With that date now past, city staff said in a report prepared for Tuesday's meeting that the arrival and growth of the Delta variant of the coronavirus — the current dominant strain in Orange County and highly contagious — has complicated matters for businesses trying to comply with the Cal OSHA Emergency Temporary Standards and other agency guidelines on distancing, ventilation and use of outdoor areas to reduce transmission of the virus.

As proposed, the emergency temporary use permits would be outstanding to the end of the year.

Following that extension, business owners would then need to follow the limited-term permit process to continue using their outdoor fixtures.

To date, the city has received 24 applications.

COVID-19

On Friday, the county reported 563 new cases and four deaths. It also confirmed the death of a child under the age of 5 from COVID-19 in August, the second pediatric case that led to death in Orange County. The first was a teenage girl with underlying medical conditions who succumbed to the disease in August 2020.

An estimated 272,055 Orange County residents have recovered from infection with the coronavirus.

The vast majority of hospitalized patients are individuals who have not been vaccinated, according to the data, and officials have stressed the importance of getting the vaccine.

"COVID-19 will be present in Orange County for the foreseeable future, and there is always the possibility of new versions of the virus emerging, like the Delta and Mu variants," Dr. Matthew Zahn, deputy county health officer, said in a statement. "Those facts do not change the things we can do to prevent this disease."

"Vaccination against COVID-19 is still the most effective way to prevent you from getting sick, being hospitalized or dying from COVID-19. In Orange County, someone who is not fully vaccinated is almost six times more likely to get COVID-19 than a person who is fully vaccinated," Zahn said. "Even with slightly declining cases in Orange County, you should get vaccinated."

As of Thursday, a little over 2 million people in Orange County have been fully vaccinated against the virus.

Among school-age children too young to receive the vaccine, cases seem to have fallen since August and appear to have plateaued or trended downward even as students have returned to campuses.

In the Newport-Mesa Unified School District, cases increased from 23 — reported on Sept. 1 — to 30 on Friday, accounting for about 0.15% of the district's population. By comparison, the Laguna Beach Unified School District, which began classes at the same time as Newport-Mesa, has seen cases fall from 16 to 13.

The number of Laguna Beach students in quarantine due to close contact with potential cases has also fallen — from 18 to 5.

In the Huntington Beach Union School District, 22 cases have been confirmed. That district began its classes on Sept. 1.

The Ocean View School District has reported no cases among students or staff. The Fountain Valley School District reported two cases among its staff.

The two districts started classes on Wednesday. The Huntington Beach City School District began on Thursday.

The healthcare agency reported that children account for 102 of the new cases of the coronavirus, with 487 in Newport Beach; 1,293 in Costa Mesa; 1,467 in Huntington Beach; 454 in Fountain Valley and 137 in Laguna Beach.

Here are the latest cumulative coronavirus case counts and COVID-19 deaths for select cities in Orange County:

- Santa Ana: 48,144 cases; 889 deaths
- Anaheim: 46,112 cases; 936 deaths
- Huntington Beach: 13,253 cases; 226 deaths
- Costa Mesa: 10,463 cases; 151 deaths
- Irvine: 13,162 cases; 96 deaths
- Newport Beach: 4,790 cases; 92 deaths
- Fountain Valley: 4,205 cases; 89 deaths
- Laguna Beach: 1,106 cases; six deaths

Brenda Green, City Clerk, City of Costa Mesa Published September 11, 2021

Currently, one Councilmember is elected from each of the seven council districts ("Districts") by the City electors at-large. If this measure is approved, the number of Districts would be reduced to six, with election of the Mayor and Districts two and five being filled at the general municipal election occurring in each even-numbered year that is evenly divisible by four; and Districts one, three, four, and six being filled at the general municipal election occurring in each even-numbered year that is not evenly divisible by four. Councilmembers would still be elected from each of the six Districts by the City electors at-large. The six new District boundaries would be established no later than six months prior to the general municipal election in 2024, by ordinance of the City Council ("Council").

Regarding Council meetings, if this measure is approved, the Mayor would be counted as a Councilmember for purposes of establishing a quorum to conduct business. The Mayor would preside at all Council meetings, be a voting member of the Council, have the discretion to determine the order of business and have a voice in all Council proceedings. Also, the Mayor would set Council meeting agendas; however, at any Council meeting, three Councilmembers would have the discretion to add an item to a future agenda.

If the measure is approved, a vacancy in the office of Mayor would be filled for the remainder of the unexpired term by a special election, called by the Council, to be held not less than 88 days nor more than 103 days after the effective date of the vacancy, except the special election may be conducted within 180 days of the effective date of the vacancy to consolidate with the City's general municipal election. An election, however, would not be ordered, and the office of Mayor would remain vacant if the term expires within the timeframe for holding a special election.

This measure, to amend the Charter to directly elect the Mayor, requires majority voter approval. If approved, this measure may be amended or repealed only by another vote of the people.
