Protesters double down on push to reopen state

BY JULIA SCLAFANI, MATT SZABO

Demonstrators turned out in force in Huntington Beach on Friday to protest the ongoing economic shutdown and measures put in place to contain the spread of the novel coronavirus.

At Pacific Coast Highway and Main Street, nearly two dozen police officers on horseback were stationed in the street, facing off with hundreds of protesters in front of the Huntington Pier.

Protesters spilled onto Main Street and Pacific Coast Highway. Some motorists driving by honked horns in encouragement.

Flanking the pier, Huntington Beach police officers were stationed in front of staircases leading to the beach that earlier in the day had been blocked off with caution tape.

"We are moving to fully reopen California now," said Tiffany Garcia, an Irvine resident who was one of the event's organizers.

Costa Mesa rolls out roadmap to economic recovery

BY FAITH E. PINHO

As the global coronavirus pandemic stretches into its eighth week, the conversation is shifting to reopening the economy, both worldwide and locally.

Amid the burst of questions at this new stage, one persists: how?

In Costa Mesa, business leaders across various industries will be putting their heads together twice a week, starting Friday, to brainstorm an answer to a puzzle no one has experience solving. A new initiative the city organized called "reStore Costa Mesa" has called on major business leaders — in automobile, banking and finance, restaurants, hospitality and tourism, as well as representatives from the Chamber of Commerce, South Coast Plaza, the Segerstrom Center for the Arts and others — along with city staff and elected officials to design a plan to reopen the local economy.

"Kind of like a wound being surrounded by cells, we're all coming together to surround our small businesses to help them grow back to what they were before," said Daniel Inloes, Costa Mesa's economic development administrator and a leader of the initiative.

The local plan expounds upon Gov. Gavin Newsom's unveiling Tuesday of a four-phased statewide plan to loosen restrictions. The governor's plan makes first priority establishing a financial safety net for low-wage workers and encouraging universal face masks. The second phase, which Costa Mesa is honing in on, would allow for some businesses deemed "lower risk" to reopen, such as some retail stores for curbside service, manufacturing sites and small businesses with few in-person customers.

Request to overturn governor's edict nixed

A Superior Court judge acts on a lawsuit by beach cities attempting to temporarily nullify an order closing Orange County beaches.

BY JULIA SCLAFANI, HILLARY DAVIS

In an Orange County Superior Court hearing held telephonically Friday, a judge denied a request to temporarily nullify an order by Gov. Gavin Newsom closing Orange County beaches effective Friday.

The fight, however, is not over.

"It's a difficult task. [Temporary restraining orders] are hard to get but it is the first step in the process," Huntington Beach City Atty. Michael Gates said after Friday's hearing.

"We are going to have a full-throated opportunity" to make a case for an injunction at the next scheduled hearing on May 11, Gates said.

The hearing followed a lawsuit filed by Huntington Beach and Dana Point along with various individual private plaintiffs that represent business with interests in coast cities.

"The Governor is acting without constitutional or statutory authority and is infringing on the cities' right to control their own beaches," said a court document filed in Superior Court Friday. "Preserving the status quo is warranted."

The status quo that Huntington Beach wanted to maintain included the ability to operate its own beaches and assess necessary safety precautions in light of the novel coronavirus.

Newsom targeted Orange County beaches for a "hard close" after last weekend's well-documented bump in visitation, which he said threatened continuing efforts to stem the spread of the coronavirus.

Orange County Superior Court Judge Nathan Scott heard lengthy arguments by attorneys representing all parties in the case before considering an injunction.

Nightclub, restaurant, LGBTQ Center team for lunch giveaway

BY MATT SZABO

Roberto Rivas of Costa Mesa was on his way to pick up school lunches for his three children at Rea Elementary on Wednesday morning when he noticed a Miguel's Jr. Homestyle Mexican Food truck.

Rivas got the lunches for his children, Sophia, Roberto and Daniel, before heading over to check out the scene in front of Strut Bar & Club on 17th Street.

He picked up three lunches from the drive-through, with a burrito, chips and salsa and a drink. Rivas said he was appreciative for the help in a tough time. The future of his job as a chef at Lighthouse Café in Newport Beach is uncertain due to the ongoing novel coronavirus pandemic, he said.

"It's hard on us right now," he said, adding that his wife also lost her job.

Strut and Miguel's Jr. aimed to help with the free food giveaway Wednesday, in association with the LGBTQ Center Orange County. They donated 470 free meals, starting at 9 a.m.

Strut owner Luke Nero said the LGBTQ Center publicized the event to its members, and the food giveaway was originally set to be for members of the local LGBTQ community. However, no one was turned away Wednesday.

"We've seen grandmothers, people with kids, people in scrubs on their way to work," Nero said. "We wanted to contribute to the local community somehow, anyhow. Luckily for us, we have an amazing parking lot in front of our building where we can facilitate a drive-through food giveaway. We initially wanted to do some kind of outreach to the queer community, but everybody's affected by this. We're a gay club, so that was our initial thought process, but this is just for everybody."

Strut, which opened last September, has also been hard-hit by the pandemic. Nero said the club has been closed since March 15.

The food giveaway was staffed by employees of the club. The initial order was for 120 meals, but that quickly was surpassed.

STRUT BAR and Club event director Venessa Lynn, left, gives multiple lunches to Rafael Lopez of Costa Mesa and his children during a free meals event in conjunction with Miguel's Jr. at the club's parking lot in Costa Mesa. More than 400 meals were passed out during the event.

Miguel's Jr. has four Orange County locations. The Costa Mesa location, at the corner of 19th Street and Newport Boulevard, was the first to open in 2012.

"I know Luke very well, and Luke said he wanted to do something for the community," said Miguel's Jr. president and CEO Javier Vasquez, who was also on hand Wednesday. "I told him, 'If you meet me halfway and staff it with your staff, I'll meet you halfway with the food.' The partnership worked out that way. We're trying our best to give back as much as we can."

Costa Mesa Mayor Katrina Foley said that the city has had a good relationship with Miguel's Jr.

More coronavirus tests than ever, also more deaths, in Orange County

BY HILLARY DAVIS

Orange County saw several single-day highs in key coronavirus metrics Friday, including positive tests, a corresponding peak in tests given — and a peak in deaths.

The OC Health Care Agency announced five additional deaths Friday related to COVID-19, the disease caused by the virus, along with 163 new cases and 2,594 tests.

This brings Orange County to 50 total deaths, 2,537 total known infections and 34,128 cumulative tests given.

The testing high comes amid a wider network of public clinics to test for COVID-19.

The OC COVID-19 Testing Network debuted April 21 and currently has clinics backed by the healthcare agency in Anaheim, Santa Ana, Huntington Beach, Garden Grove and at UCI Health locations. Tests are by appointment only for people with symptoms of what could be

COVID-19.

When county officials unveiled the testing network, they hoped to see 2,000 tests per day by this month. The clinics augment testing opportunities offered by private healthcare providers.

COVID-19 continues to be the most consequential for elderly people. The most recently reported deaths were all in patients older than 75, according to healthcare agency data. Twenty-eight of all 50 people whose deaths the county attributed to COVID-19 were in this age range. Another five were between 65 and 74.

Orange County's previous single-day high point for fatalities came April 18, when four deaths were reported. Its previous high-water mark for new known cases was more recent — Thursday — with 145 new cases and Sunday for tests given, with 2,267 reported that day.

The Health Care Agency also said Friday that 181 people were hospitalized with the virus and 61 of them in intensive care, with 23 hospitals reporting. Including COVID-19 patients, area hospitals were at 57% capacity.

Here are the latest case counts for select cities, with their numbers per 10,000 residents:

- Santa Ana: 430 (12.7 cases per 10,000 residents)
- Anaheim: 364 (10.1 cases per 10,000 residents)
- Huntington Beach: 225 (11 cases per 10,000 residents)
- Irvine: 133 (4.7 cases per 10,000 residents)
- Newport Beach: 98 (11.2 cases per 10,000 residents)
- Costa Mesa: 40 (3.5 cases per 10,000 residents)
- Laguna Beach: 37 (15.8 cases per 10,000 residents)

"The status quo appears to be that the governor's order is in effect, which would weight toward receiving a full briefing before making changes to that," Scott said.

"Based on what information I do have at this early stage, a balancing of interests and harms on both sides would tilt in favor of declining to intervene in the governor's orders and in favor of ... protecting public safety," Scott said.

Lawyers bringing the suit forward argued that Newsom's decision to selectively close Orange County beaches undermines the notion that the order stems from a public safety concern. Additionally, plaintiffs argued that the move by Sacramento was an overreach and violated local control.

"The state does not control every aspect of governance. ... Emergency declaration does not give the governor the power to really eviscerate all local control simply because there is a state of emergency," said A. Patrick Munoz, attorney for Dana Point.

The Huntington Beach city attorney's office began working on the court filing late Thursday night after the Huntington Beach City Council voted in an emergency meeting to authorize the office to pursue a lawsuit.

Gates called the governor's order to close local beaches "vague and squishy" and a "completely arbitrary and capricious" move.

"The order isn't even a written order, it's a letter... It relies on his stay-away orders" Gates said, questioning if a stay-away order could be used to compel residents to stay at home. "It's debatable what his authority is in the first place."

"It's not going to hold up legally, it's not specific, it doesn't give the city very good legal direction," he said. "We believe it's an unconstitutional violation of the city's rights to govern itself in these respects."

"All of the parties, whether public servants or business owners, have a vested interest in working together ... to strike a balance ... I'm sure many of us hope that you will be able to work out a reasonable compromise," Scott said.

For his part, "all I can say is, it doesn't surprise me — and we'll see," Newsom said about the lawsuit at his Friday news conference.

The Huntington Beach Police Department clarified on social media that the city will be following the governor's orders, though relying on voluntary compliance.

"We understand this has been a difficult time for everyone, and public safety has, and will continue to be, the number one priority for the City of Huntington Beach," the department said in a Facebook post late Thursday.

"This is a temporary closure, hopefully of a short duration, and our goal in the enforcement of the closure will be to rely on education and voluntary compliance. If voluntary compliance cannot be achieved, enforcement action will be taken if necessary," the department said, asking the public to adhere to the governor's order. The department said in another post Friday that it was compelled to repeat the closures when surfers and others ventured out to the beach that morning, but indicated that police efforts would be focused on planned protests in the area of Main Street and Huntington Pier.

Both post drew hundreds of comments — many airing frustration, some only tangentially related to the beach closures. Huntington Beach Councilwomen Kim Carr and Barbara Delgleize opposed the move to pursue a lawsuit at Thursday's emergency vote.

"When you have lawyers as part of the conversation, the conversation stops, and my goal is to open up the beaches as quickly as possible," Carr said Thursday.

"To me this is a public safety issue. This is becoming a political issue. And I think that we all have the objective of we want our beaches open. I come from a beach family. ... I use the beach almost on a daily basis for my whole mental health and well being. And so to have the beaches close is detrimental to my family," Carr said, adding, "I don't believe suing the state is the most efficient and quickest way to resolve the issue."

"A better course of action is to have thoughtful conversation with state, county, and other coastal mayors on a comprehensive plan to re-open our future, because this isn't just an H.B. issue. This affects all of the beaches from Seal Beach to San Clemente. And I think that we all need to work together and collaborate and address the issues," Carr said.

Gates contested that the opportunity for problem-solving never arose.

"Huntington Beach has gone to every length to make sure our beaches are safe. ... The governor never reached out to our city leaders here to see if something could be worked out," he said. "That opportunity was never afforded to the city."

In Newport Beach, the City Council agreed to meet Saturday morning to discuss joining the suit. Councilman Kevin Muldoon, who called for the meeting, said at an emergency meeting hours after Newsom's order Thursday that he wanted to "seek all legal means available to fight the arbitrary and unconstitutional exercise of power by the governor that would take away control of our local beaches."

Only two days prior, the Newport council — though split 5-2 — agreed after extensive debate not to clamp down with potential road or beach closures over the next three weekends to control crowds. Though they had also been spurred to quick action by complaints from residents, especially those closest to the Balboa Peninsula and Corona del Mar shorelines, about throngs of weekend visitors ignoring physical distancing guidelines, jamming residential streets to park their cars and engaging in boorish behavior, the city instead held to existing crowd management measures with more police and lifeguard presence.

Newport had already agreed to some crowd control measures in recent weeks like boardwalk and pier closures and parking restrictions.

A surge of emails from residents over the past 24 hours showed, as they did before Tuesday's locally controlled closure consideration, support for shutdown and access, compliance and resistance.

"I urge you to ignore, challenge and fight by all means necessary the governor's beach closure order," wrote Doug Prichard.

"Local city government knows best how to manage these beaches," wrote Robert Longpre. "Stop Gov. Newsom's interference in running our city."

Conversely, "I am absolutely opposed to you wasting city resources on filing or joining any litigation against the state because you feel the state has infringed on the rights of governance of the city of Newport Beach," wrote Buzz Person.

"This has become political and it never should have been. Please show you have some intestinal fortitude on this issue."

Newport's meeting starts at 9 a.m. Saturday. It will be broadcast live on the city website and the NBTV cable television channel. To watch the meeting online or for information on how to participate remotely, visit newportbeachca.gov.

Rodrigo Abd | Associated Press

SCIENTISTS AT THE Pastoruri glacier in Huaraz, Peru, measure ice thickness.

It's not a stretch to juxtapose the coronavirus and climate change crises

Today we face two global threats that each have the potential to dramatically impact human life, individual livelihoods and society at large. The causes behind both crises are invisible to the naked eye, require policymakers and the public to rely on scientists and, as with most threats, have the potential to be politicized for partisan gain.

Yet they've also produced drastically different levels of response. While the coronavirus demands our immediate attention, the juxtaposition of COVID-19 with the climate crisis produces interesting points of comparison worthy of discussion.

In the case of the coronavirus, we're, of course, talking about a contagious biological danger that strikes suddenly, indiscriminately and causes severe illness. Meanwhile, climate impacts are less direct, less personally invasive and not as clear cut as sick or not sick.

Yet, another important distinction is that COVID-19 comes with a unique fingerprint that doctors can use, or test for, to confirm infection and explain symptoms. In the case of climate change, there is of course no diagnostic that can identify climate change catastrophes — only climate catastrophes.

That is, we can identify hurricanes, floods, droughts and wildfires, but attributing their prevalence or severity to human activity and a warming planet is a much more convoluted process involving multiple scientific disciplines and a wealth of statistics and scientific modeling; after which a visceral sense of urgency gets lost.

Nonetheless, there are important attributes of greenhouse gas emissions that warrant immediate international action once we've recovered from the more acutely threatening coronavirus. For one, greenhouse gas molecules, such as carbon dioxide, are multi-generational, lasting 100 years or more in the atmosphere. The ability of these heat-trapping gases to cause and/or exacerbate destruction through rising sea levels, infectious disease, heat waves, floods, droughts, wildfires and extreme weather is therefore extremely long term.

If there is one lesson to be gleaned from the COVID-19 pandemic, it's that delayed action and inadequate preparation can have devastating consequences. While the Trump administration dithered during the early stages of the pandemic, countries such as Taiwan, South Korea and Germany were early to employ strict mitigation and prevention procedures such as widespread testing and detection follow-up, closing down non-essential businesses, mandating social distancing, and even halting the exportation of face masks while ramping up domestic production. Consequently, death and disease caused by COVID-19 were substantially diminished in these countries.

International successes occurred because leadership and citizenry allowed science to guide policy and was willing to employ the government to carry it out. It was a level of collaboration and commitment not unlike that needed to address the climate crisis.

Unlike COVID-19, the climate crisis doesn't have to wait for vaccines or breakthroughs. Scientists have identified the problem, engineers have developed solutions, and policy makers have devised a blueprint for action. We must reduce greenhouse gas emissions by phasing out fossil fuels and in turn spurring the transition to a clean energy economy.

To that end, many scientists, economists, business leaders and faith communities have coalesced around a specific policy solution called "carbon fee and dividend." This policy would correct an important pollution-related market failure by pricing the carbon content of fossil fuel emissions and rebating the revenue equally to all citizens.

Before Congress today are four bipartisan bills which offer variations of this approach. Republicans like that such policies are market-friendly, revenue-neutral and neither increase taxes on citizens nor expand the size of government, while Democrats value the carbon dividend aspect that provides economic justice for low- and middle-income households.

The bipartisan nature of this approach and its potential to curb global greenhouse gas emissions at the scale and speed necessary makes such policy particularly attractive.

As scientists, business leaders, politicians and everyday citizens come together to contain the coronavirus, this pandemic will ultimately fade. Meanwhile, the concentration of greenhouse gases and the daunting threat of climate change will only grow.

As 2020 is an election year, it is more important than ever to heed the critical lessons from COVID-19 and apply them toward the next great threat.

This means electing leaders that respect science and are prepared to use the instruments of government judiciously to ensure a safe and healthy population as well as a habitable planet for future generations.

Garcia, who works in healthcare, said she has family members who have lost jobs.

"Our 1st Amendment rights are being trampled on completely and we aren't going to stand it anymore," Garcia said.

"People work their whole lives for their business and they are losing their businesses in a month. This is not OK," she said.

"The Constitution is not conditional. It's not, no matter what. If we don't get out here and fight for those rights, I can't look my daughter in the face when I get home."

On a day that would otherwise offer perfect beach weather, protesters crowded the sidewalks — most forgoing recommended face coverings — to push local and state leaders to lift measures they say are keeping people from enjoying beaches like Huntington's, but also dampening the economy.

Using megaphones and signs, they demanded the state reopen its economy and allow life in public to return to normal.

The gathering was substantially bigger than the protest on Main Street two weeks ago. Huntington Beach Police Department spokeswoman Angie Bennett said there were no arrests or injuries, and estimated the crowd at about 2,500 people.

Julian Brudnick, 28, of Yorba Linda waved a black flag with a snake that read "Don't Tread on Me."

"I think it all comes down to the same thing, which is personal freedom and liberty, and not sacrificing freedom for security," Brudnick said. "I haven't seen this many people not wearing a mask. I go into Home Depot, you cough or sneeze and people give you a dirty look. What they can make us do to each other is unbelievable."

In light of Thursday's order by Gov. Gavin Newsom closing Orange County beaches, protesters directed their ire at the state's highest elected office.

A sky banner reading "FIRE GRUESOME NEWSOM! OPEN CALIFORNIA!" flew overhead.

Huntington Beach resident and professor of nursing at Santa Ana College Becky Ettinger carried a data-laden poster showing statistics related to COVID-19 infection.

mask — she displayed her sign: "Reopen Cali Now!"

"Poverty contributes to early death, 22 million job losses since COVID-19," it said.

"My problem now is, what about the mental health issues of anxiety, depression, suicide, domestic violence and child abuse?" Ettinger said.

"All of these things are going off the chart now, and nobody's even talking about it. That's a shame to me because, as somebody that studies the health of the population, this is what we should be focusing on."

Ettinger made sure to mention on her sign that she was a resident of Surf City.

"A lot of us from Huntington Beach, we want this all to stop," Ettinger said. "We want people to be able to open up their businesses. I would like to see every business opened up here on Main Street right now, because we need to get back outside."

Garcia said the protest was nonpartisan. Though some wore "Make America Great Again" hats or had signs supporting President Trump, one man carried a sign that read, "Democrats for reopening California."

The man, who declined to give his name, said that he is most likely out of a job for the foreseeable future. He works as an audio engineer for nightclubs and concerts.

"I haven't worked in approaching three months, and I haven't seen any kind of a layout, a timeline, a ballpark," he said.

"These people work for us. We put these people in office, and I don't get the vibe that this [stay-at-home directive] is what people want."

Another protest took place early Friday morning in Huntington Beach. Republic Services sanitation workers held a protest demanding that Republic Services and its largest shareholder, Bill Gates, protect workers by providing proper personal protective equipment, improving safety standards and guaranteeing to pay every worker for 40 hours of work amid the COVID-19 pandemic.

The Teamsters members held signs saying, "Republic Services: Workers Need Protection."

pronged structure to localize the governor's plan for reopening businesses. The first cornerstone of "reStore Costa Mesa" will rely on third-party sources to collect data on the status of the coronavirus and the economy. The second, to "develop a legitimate and mature 'shop local' campaign," Inloes said, will disseminate messaging through city channels and ambassadors across the community.

"Always think Costa Mesa local first," said Eileen Benjamin, CEO of the nearly 500-member Costa Mesa Chamber of Commerce. "You got to help your own community — that's where you live."

The third cornerstone of the reStore Costa Mesa plan will establish a call center by reassigning city staff to collect qualitative data from businesses across the city about the challenges they face to reopening. Finally, the city intends to develop a comprehensive list of businesses and their modified services.

Aside from the four cornerstones, Inloes said the city is exploring the possibility of partnering with microlenders, such as Kiva, to create more aid opportunities for small businesses.

While Costa Mesa is not likely to create its own loan program — the city is losing money alongside everyone else — it could provide credibility for businesses in the community seeking help, Mayor Pro Tem John Stephens said.

"It's creating like a bridge between capital market and people that need it who would otherwise not have access to that capital," he said of microlending opportunities.

While discussion of reopening the economy begins to take shape, some businesses worry that government aid may be coming too late.

Benjamin said she is not aware of any businesses associated with the chamber that have received federal stimulus funding yet, though some are getting approved and others are in processing.

"There's still the majority of people waiting to hear something and they fear that by the time they are gotten to, the money will be gone," she said. "How long can these businesses wait before they go under?"

Diane Pritchett, executive director of the South Coast Metro Alliance, said the business community is hungry for a date so they can begin their own reopening plans in earnest.

Already, many industries are preparing to put new protocols in place, such as taking temperatures at the door, reconfiguring dining rooms to accommodate distancing, installing more hand sanitizer stations and requiring masks or gloves.

"I think everybody is done with this whole thing and ready to open," Pritchett said. "They're cautiously optimistic."

Maurizio Cocchi never thought he would be celebrating the seventh anniversary of Vitaly Caffè, his quintessentially Italian restaurant at the Camp, in the middle of a global pandemic.

But that's the situation he found himself in Friday, as his business, which once employed more than 20 people, had dwindled down to only a couple of employees to keep up its to-go service.

As soon as the opportunity to reopen arises, Cocchi said he'll be ready with new protocols in place.

"It's our decision to be absolutely 100% careful in what we are going to produce and how ... to avoid any potential contamination in contact or serving or talking to people," said the restaurateur. "In any case this is something that does change restaurant life forever, probably."

Costa Mesa took its first steps to reopening this week, when the city relaxed its restrictions on open spaces, reopening golf courses and allowing for pass-throughs in some parks. But the city — along with the rest of California — is still weeks away from its new normal.

"Even though we're going to start to slowly reopen, make sure we only go out for essential activities, ... [and] we stay physically distanced," Mayor Katrina Foley said in a virtual town hall meeting Thursday. "You got to remember to keep that distance and that's the way we will be able to continue to open more and more businesses."

since the Corona-based company entered Orange County. As she watched the long line of cars backing up in the parking lot, Foley said the company has provided food for the city's high school football and basketball teams in the past.

She thanked those who walked through the parking lot for wearing their masks and practicing social distancing.

"Really, what we're finding is that there's this whole group of people that are hungry," Foley said. "They're low-wage workers who either worked in hospitality or in food service, kitchens and different places. Housekeepers, nannies, they don't have jobs and they don't have unemployment necessarily either. It's a struggle right now, so to be able to support families right in the heart of the Westside is really generous."

Nero said that he's hopeful that Strut will be able to reopen soon. But, for now, he said he was happy to be able to contribute during the pandemic.

"We've been replenishing [the meals] by the hundreds, every 15 minutes it feels like," he said. "It's just a reflection of the times. Nobody is immune from this scenario. It doesn't matter what demographic, even what financial bracket you fall in. People have been hit from all angles."

Costa Mesa courses reopen

BY ANDREW TURNER

Kyle Wilson has been at Costa Mesa Country Club for 21 years, and he took over as the club's director of golf about a year ago.

When he took the job, he had no idea that it would involve playing the role of gatekeeper.

These are anything but ordinary times due to the coronavirus pandemic, and Wilson found himself in that unfamiliar position as noon approached on Wednesday.

For the first time since March 20, Costa Mesa Country Club opened its two public golf courses — Mesa Linda and Los Lagos — for walking play only.

Those wishing to play needed to book a tee time before arriving, and club staff stopped arriving cars before entering the parking lot to check that they had done so.

If players arrived earlier than 15 minutes before their tee time, they were asked to remain in their parked cars until they were within the specified window.

No matter what the job required on reopening day, Wilson said that morale at the club was “super good.” He felt that even the best-laid plans could go awry, but he said that had not been the case.

“I didn't expect it to run as smoothly as it has, so it's been a lot better than I anticipated,” Wilson said.

“Everybody is cooperating. For the most part, everybody understands. Everybody is doing their part. Everything has been good.”

Further precautions were put in place on the course. Lines of tape set six feet apart marked where members of the group waiting to tee off could stand.

Danny Lane, the general manager of Costa Mesa Country Club, added that the restrooms were open, but that a staff member was cleaning them every hour, as well as any touch points in the area.

The driving range and putting green were closed, as was the clubhouse. Only the starter window was open.

Lane added that cups at the holes had been turned inside out, allowing players to sink their putts while still being able to pick their ball up with ease.

“I'm extremely grateful to the golfing public,” Lane said. “They've done a fantastic job adhering to all our guidelines, very thorough guidelines — not coming 15 minutes in advance, face coverings, social distancing. We've been very impressed with them, and that's made it actually a very good start to us opening up.”

Dan Berkenfield, 45, of Costa Mesa was one of the first to play again at the venue, having been invited by a friend who secured the first tee time of 6:08 a.m.

He said that he had not told his 15-year-old son, Max, that the club was open Wednesday, and that he would likely be eager to hit the links, too.

“He'll be jealous,” Berkenfield said. “He'll be happy to hear about this.”

Eddie Rodriguez, 30, was getting ready to start his round on the Mesa Linda course when he shared his thoughts about playing golf with safe-play protocols in effect.

“A lot of people aren't taking this [pandemic] seriously, whether you want to or not, but the fact that they have to [in order] to be open, I'll follow the rules for us to get out here,” said Rodriguez, who formerly played golf at Costa Mesa High and graduated in 2008. “I'm fine with that. Everybody should be. It's silly to not be.”

Both Costa Mesa Country Club and Mesa Verde

Country Club, a private club that also opened again on Wednesday, took advantage of the stoppage in golf to aerate their greens, leaving their respective courses in pristine condition for golfers upon their return.

“We're just happy to be here,” said Jeremy Samson, the general manager of Mesa Verde Country Club. “We're happy to have our members back on the golf course, and we've developed a safety protocol that we're following to a 'T,' and they're obviously pretty happy to be back.”

“We feel like we can continue to have them utilize the club in a limited capacity, and we're moving forward. I look forward to helping Costa Mesa reopen as quickly and safely as possible.”

HOCKEY

Locals shine as Ducks league ends its season before shutdown hits

BY ANDREW TURNER

Three years ago, the Edison High hockey team played into mid-March on its way to capturing the Commissioner's Cup.

Edison edged La Puente Bishop Amat 6-4 in the Anaheim Ducks High School Hockey League's Division 3 championship game at The Rinks Anaheim Ice.

The season used to stretch from September into February before starting the playoffs, but the opening of Great Park Ice and FivePoint Arena in Irvine at the start of 2019 allowed for a condensed schedule.

If there were ever good timing, this was it. The ADHSHL was largely unaffected by the outbreak of the coronavirus.

“Luckily, we had already planned to condense our season with more ice availability at Great Park,” Erik Pessolano, the ADHSHL's director of media, said via text message. “We completed a full 18-game season from October to February before the pandemic halted most sports. We finished our playoffs, as well, and the state playoffs were completed, too. The only thing that did not occur was the high school national championships.”

After a one-year stint at Division 1 following the title run, Edison was back in Division 3 last season. This season, the Chargers made the leap to Division 2.

Edison (14-5-0-1, third place) had forward Stephen Bedard, defenseman Clay Bozanich and Easton Laird, and goaltender Grey Godfrey named to the ADHSHL Senior All-Star game this season.

Senior forward Evan Osterkamp and Bozanich each had two goals, and Bedard had a four-point performance as the Chargers routed the Poway Unified Hawks 8-2 in the Division 2 quarterfinals.

The Chargers lost to eventual champion Bellflower St. John Bosco 3-2 in the semifinals. Junior forward Ryan Newton and Laird scored the goals for Edison.

Beach Cities (10-6-0-4, fifth) had Tommy Lang, a senior center at Huntington Beach, selected to the ADHSHL Senior All-Star game. Senior goaltender Ricardo Arellanes (Redondo Union) and senior defenseman Paul Wagner (Huntington Beach) were also chosen to play in the Varsity All-Star game.

Forward Joe Rando, a junior at Huntington Beach, led the Beach Cities squad with 10 goals and 10 assists during the regular season.

Lang got red-hot late in the season, scoring 11 goals to go with three assists over a four-game stretch. The hot streak culminated with a four-goal, six-point performance in a 10-1 win over the Corona-Norco Stingrays in the first round of the Division 2 playoffs on Feb. 12.

“That was definitely fun,” Lang said. “I scored all four of my goals with the exact same shot in the exact same spot, just top right corner every time.”

“The goalie wouldn't ever cover it, so it's just every time I came down, pretty much always coming down the right side, top right would be open. It kept working, so if it ain't broke, don't fix it.”

Lang said that hockey is a year-round sport for him, as he also plays club hockey with the California Wave organization. The coronavirus has taken that away for now, but he hopes to continue playing hockey in college.

Chargers coach David Walker also holds the title of Great Park Ice Hockey manager. He believes that the sport will be able to sustain through the hiatus forced upon its players and fans by COVID-19.

“I don't think that the shutdown is really going to affect the long term, because at the end of the day, people who are involved in the game of hockey, they're involved with it because they love it,” Walker said. “Once things pick up, things that you love, you're going to end up going back to.”

“I think if anything, it helps people realize how much they truly miss it and enjoy being around it. If anything, it might actually bring more people back into it, realizing how something [has been] removed from your everyday life that you take for granted.”

NOT ON THE CALL

Announcers deal with absence of sports during pandemic

BY ANDREW TURNER

One would be hard-pressed to find another who loves the sport of volleyball more than Rob Espero.

The Costa Mesa resident was doing live interviews for VolleyballMag.com at a tri-dual beach volleyball event at Merle Norman Stadium at USC on March 11 when he overheard a fan mention that the Utah Jazz at Oklahoma City Thunder basketball game had been canceled.

As it turned out, the coronavirus was one of the few things that could pull Espero away from the volleyball court.

“I literally lost 90% of my work within a period of 72 hours, it felt like,” said Espero, who announces for high school, college and professional matches.

The CIF State and Southern Section championships, the Volleyball Nations League and AVP events in the area are just a few of the gigs that Espero had lined up.

Thanks to a timely promotion for his wife, Tracey, who works for Boeing, the family has been able to hold it together financially.

Espero, 50, stays home with the kids, a 9-year-old daughter and a 5-year-old son. Working volleyball matches provided a flexible schedule that was generally in the evenings.

“Now that everyone is sheltered in, we don't have the [baby]sitter,” Espero said. “We don't have the coverage, so the challenge has been trying to keep him distracted while maintaining the studies for my daughter, keeping her on her required hours for the day of schooling, as well as completing projects, while I have this super active, physical, vibrant, energetic boy.”

“He wants to wrestle, so honestly, it's been the biggest challenge because I'm exhausted by the end of the day.”

Espero has devoted his free time to the Viral Volley Podcast. He has been bringing athletes on the show and interviewing them to spotlight the sport. Costa Mesa's Sara Hughes, who partnered with Kelly Claes for back-to-back NCAA championships in beach volleyball (2016 and 2017) while at USC, was recently a guest.

“I'm more concerned for athletes who make this their living,” Espero said. “Time is the commodity that they can't get back, and they've lost a year of their competition, be it high school, club, juniors, collegiate or professional. My heart breaks for them because I see how they train. I see the commitment and dedication they have to be the best.”

After retiring from coaching track and field, which included stints at Golden West College (2003-15) and Mt. San Antonio College (1999-2004), Don Turnbull knew he had to stick around the sport.

Turnbull, 50, of Anaheim said that announcing accounts for about a third of his annual income. He is also a commission-based salesman for VS Athletics, which sells track and field equipment, so the sports shutdown has been a big hit.

The Mt. SAC Relays, the Ben Brown Invitational at Cal State Fullerton, meets at UC Irvine and the CIF State track and field championships are among the events Turnbull was slated to work.

Turnbull said that announcing could fill his schedule in a hurry with the copious notetaking. “You have to do introductions for every race,” Turnbull said. “You have to know things about at least one or two people in every race, if not everyone in the race, ... their [personal records] or what their accomplishments were.”

Having been behind the microphone on and off for close to 30 years and solidly for the last decade, Turnbull has quite a few connections in the sport, including his past athletes. The loss of the season has been tough.

“I'm missing being out there,”

ROB ESPERO speaks at the AVPFIRST “Serving Up Style” charity event in Huntington Beach in November.

said Turnbull, who added that he last coached in 2016 working with the national teams of Saudi Arabia and New Zealand. “The biggest thing is I miss seeing all the people I know on a daily basis.”

Aaron Rosenberg, 35, of Glendale has been a play-by-play announcer for CASportsZone since the 2014 football season.

He began calling games for the Huntington Beach baseball team midway through the 2018 season.

Rosenberg said he deals in taxes and bookkeeping as his primary job. Love of baseball was so great for the former LA Valley College pitcher that he was willing to pick up more work in his busiest time of the year.

“I'm still busy,” Rosenberg said. “It was actually pretty stressful, trying to juggle all these things before this happened. I love baseball, so I was happy to do it.”

Rosenberg thought about the canceled Boras Classic tournament as a lost opportunity for unsigned seniors to showcase their talents to coaches and scouts.

Asked what stood out to him from the abbreviated season, Rosenberg raved about Jake Vogel, the Oilers' center fielder who is committed to UCLA.

“He was incredible to watch,” Rosenberg said. “He could do everything on the field. He had incredible range in the outfield, had a cannon for an arm. He could hit for average. He could hit for power. He's a great baserunner.”

“Actually, the last game that we did was a road game at Laguna Beach, and he hit for the cycle that day.”
