At the shopping center's Atrium Garden Court, the Chabad Center for Jewish Life oversaw the ceremonial lighting late Sunday afternoon of the helper candle, which is used to light all other candles throughout each of the eight nights, as well as the first candle.

The event was marked with a performance from the Los Judios Locos to kick off the festivities and a toy drive to distribute to children in need. Also available to the attending public were holiday treats, Hanukkah crafts, face painting and balloon animals.

"[Hanukkah] is a holiday that enriches our lives and strengthens our tradition,' Rabbi Reuven Mintz, of the Chabad Center for Jewish Life, said in a statement. "In ancient times, our ancestors rededicated the Temple in Jerusalem. Today, we rededicate ourselves to making this world a better and brighter place. Chanukah also transmits the universal message that ultimately good will prevail over evil, freedom over oppression and light over darkness."

Hanukkah will continue through Dec. 26 this year. — Lilly Nguyen

The Banning Ranch Conservancy will form a team of volunteer restoration specialists to help preserve the area.

With the acquisition of the Banning Ranch property announced late last week, the area known as the Randall Preserve is officially complete and in public hands.

The 387-acre parcel is home to an estimated 100 acres of marshland, mudflats, riparian scrub and 67 acres of coastal sage scrub with critical habitats for endangered species like burrowing owls, fairy shrimp and peregrine falcons, according to a news release issued Monday by the Trust for Public Land, California Natural Resources Agency, Mountains Recreation and Conservation Authority and the Banning Ranch Conservancy.

The property has long been vied for by developers as the last remaining piece of undeveloped coastal property in Southern California. But through the efforts of conservationists, the land will now become a public park and preserve. It will be under the stewardship of the Mountains Recreation and Conservation Au-

"Conservation takes a long time to happen," said conservancy executive director Melanie Schlotterbeck in an interview Monday. "In this instance, it was 23 years to get to this day and that persist-

16th birthday on Dec. 21, 2017. The hope was to not only honor his life and legacy but also to raise awareness of teen suicide and to advocate for societal changes he desired.

The first year after Patrick's death, his parents Kim and John Turner, wanting to do something, decided to hire the TK Burger truck to come over to the park near their home to honor him.

"We spread the word to Corona del Mar High School students, friends and family and on the last day of school before Christmas vacation about 150 kids, friends, and family turned out," said Kim Turner. "We got such a good turnout we thought maybe we should create a walk, similar to American Foundation of Suicide Prevention. Now we do a walk every year as close to his birthday as possible."

Patrick's feelings in a final message are shared at the foundation's website, patrickspurposefound ation.org.

"So much pressure is put on kids to do good, and a lot of kids make mistakes. One slip up makes a kid feel like the smallest person in the world. All anyone

Michele Bethel, a Harbor View neighbor and friend of the Turner family, became a Patrick's Purpose Foundation board member as a way to support the ef-

"When the Turner family suffered their loss, the community came together as a whole when Patrick took his own life," said Bethel. "I just felt having kids the same age it was so important to get the message out by getting more involved and just offering what more we can do to honor Patrick's memory.

"It's a unique neighborhood, we all feel so close in here with neighbors and friends involved in similar activities, our husbands even coached together," she said. The tight-knit neighborhood looks out for one another with an underlying obligation to lend support to all of the kids in the community.

Bethel explained that the walks have provided an opportunity to talk on a deeper level about personal experience. Participants share why they are there, which she has found overwhelming at times because everyone seems to know someone who has experienced teen mental health issues.

"It's so important for us to be talking about mental health, even at a young age," said Bethel.

She recalled a mom who brought her young children to the 2021 Patrick's Purpose walk. The woman didn't have any specific connection to the community at large or to the Turners specifically, but she felt it was important to bring her boys to the event.

"Well, I saw her again today after the walk was over eating burgers with her three boys on the lawn and I went over to say 'Hi' because I recognized them from last year," said Bethel.

"She shared that since last year's walk, one of her son's friends took his life. She said they will come to the walk every year from now on in support and to spread awareness."

A CdM classmate of Turner's, Winston Bowyer, now 21, started an official student Patrick's Purpose organization at Texas Christian University to value life and for suicide prevention.

"When he passed on I gravitated to the Turner family and as a way to turn around one of the worst tragedies, I wanted to make something positive come from it," Bowyer said. "I met Patrick in high school because we both had crazy curly hair. I was new to the school, and he made me feel welcome and at home and he looked out for me."

Also participating in Saturday's walk was local resident Imogen Miramadi. She said she was there by herself this year because her son was out of the this opportunity came up, I really jumped at it.

"It's our newest CCA in the state of California, the only one in Orange County and it really holds tremendous promise for the future," he continued. "I'm excited to be here at a time when we're kind of moving from that startup mode to fully operational mode.

He was the chairman of the board of directors and founding member of San Diego Community Power, which launched in 2019, and also has served on several energy-related boards, including the San Diego County Water Authority.

Mosca said San Diego Community Power has grown to 30 staff members and increased energy production and revenues.

"Certainly, you learn a lot of lessons on how to put together a team and how to inspire the team, how to put together plans and goals and deal with the investor-owned utilities," he said. "You learn how to communicate with your customers and to plan for the future, and also work with all of the other CCAs in the state."

Mosca also previously worked for the Southern California Gas Co. from 2010 to 2011, and as the public affairs lead on major projects for San Diego Gas and Electric from 2015 to 2018.

More recently, he also served two terms as the president of the San Dieguito Water District.

Mosca, a 20-year member of the California Bar Assn., holds a juris doctorate from Quinnipiac University School of Law and a bachelor's degree in political science from Rhode Island College.

His hiring comes during a key week for the OCPA. The community CCE program is currently the default energy choice for four Orange County communities — Irvine, Huntington Beach, Fullerton and Buena Park — as well as unincorporated areas.

Surf City started commercial service last spring, and residential service in October, as the OCPA took over for Southern California Edison as a default energy option in Huntington Beach.

But after a pair of audits performed by the county, the Orange County Board of Supervisors voted 3-2 to withdraw the unincorporated areas out of the OCPA during Tuesday's meeting.

Additionally, an item on Tuesday night's Huntington Beach City Council agenda, submitted by new Mayor Pro Tem Gracey Van Der Mark and Councilman Casey McKeon, would change Huntington Beach's OCPA energy rate to basic choice and seeks guidance from staff on how to withdraw from the organization entirely.

The basic choice plan provides 38% renewable energy, instead of the 100% rate that is currently Hunt-ence, diligence and collaboration cannot be lost on this moment. There are a lot of players involved, whether that's people who have been here for 23 years like [conservancy board president] Terry Welsh or some that came, did their good deed and moved on."

Schlotterbeck said protection of Banning Ranch was only possible because of the property owners' willingness to sell the land and because of the $50million donation from Newport Beach philanthropists Frank and Joan Randall in 2019.

The land will now enter remediation phase, which involves the removal of existing oil infrastructure by Aera Energy and its partners over the next two to three years. Schlotterbeck confirmed no public tax dollars will be spent on that work, as Aera will be financing it.

"As a California company. Aera holds the values of Californians: We strive to innovate, we celebrate productivity, and we advocate for the preservation of our beautiful state," Erik Bartsch, president and chief executive of Aera Energy, said in a statement. "Today, we also celebrate the sale of our Newport Banning Ranch property, a historic moment that speaks to our commitment to the environment and people of California.

'We are proud that this land is now in conservation and will forever be open space to be enjoyed by millions of people, in perpetuity."

In the meantime, the Banning Ranch Conservancy will not be resting on its laurels. Schlotterbeck said the conservancy recently established the PEER — partnerships, engagement, equity and inclusion, and restoration program to cultivate a team of dedicated volunteers that will gain experience as restoration specialists by working on existing projects in neighboring public lands such as Costa Mesa's Fairview Park and the Huntington Beach wetlands.

"By the time [Banning Ranch's] ready for us, we'll hopefully have several years of experience and a robust volunteer base," Schlotterbeck said. "We do know that our landscapes impact one another. Plants, butterflies and coyotes don't know human boundaries. What's important is that the landscapes that are protected are held to a level of conservation so that all the neighboring lands benefit."

She added that the conservancy will be working with the Mountains Recreation and Conservation Authority on a resource management plan and a coastal resilience plan to determine what activities might be suitable for the land and where.

"We hope to be and position ourselves to be a partner on the ground to MRCA when it comes to historical knowledge, connections with the community, relationships with elected officials and decision makers. We will still be engaged. It's just no longer a fight," Schlotter-beck said, adding that they were celebrating now but would roll up their sleeves to do the work next year.

"We're in collaboration mode," she said.

BOYS' BASKETBALL

Costa Mesa defends home court against Estancia

BY ANDREW TURNER

The Costa Mesa High boys' basketball team kicked off its Orange Coast League slate in just the manner it would have hoped.

After experiencing their share of bumps and bruises in nonleague play, the host Mustangs earned a comfortable 63-45 victory over crosstown rival Estancia in Friday night's game.

Senior shooting guard Josh Galamgam scored 22 points to go with four rebounds and three steals to lead Costa Mesa (4-9 overall). Senior point guard Christian Dasca added 10 points, eight assists and five rebounds, and sophomore guard Garry Sloane also scored in double figures with 10 points.

The Mustangs needed to get their season on track, and as if that was not enough motivation, they were looking at an Estancia (8-4, 0-2 in the Orange Coast League) side that went to the CIF Southern Section Division 5AA quarterfinals last winter.

"Two years ago, we were able to get to the CIF finals, and Estancia wanted that motivation to beat us," Costa Mesa coach Jesse Mercado said. "This last year, obviously, they went further in playoffs, so we've got some extra motivation to want to beat our backyard rival. This rivalry has been going on longer than I've been here, but it's something that's fun for the community."

Costa Mesa outscored Estancia 15-5 in the second quarter, allowing the Mustangs to go into the halftime locker room with a 33-22 lead.

"We just got to execute a little better," Estancia coach Xavier Castellano said. "We gave a lot of second-chance points in that first half, and we worked on it. Josh [Galamgam] is a good shooter. As good as [Christian] Dasca is, Josh is very good, as well, and he had 14 points, I think, in that first half. He kind of killed us.'

Senior Riley Weinstein, junior Marco Rosas and sophomore Kembe Howerton totaled 14 points as a frontcourt for Costa Mesa, but their impact was felt in providing second-chance opportunities for the outside shooters of the Mustangs.

"It's nice because this is the biggest team I've ever had since I've been here," Mercado said. "We have three guys inside that can kind of play multiple positions, and they complement each other very well. Definitely, having that size inside helps change shots and helps the rebounding."

Senior small forward Reef Johnson and junior point guard Jaedon Hose-Shea each scored 13 points for Estancia. Junior center Peter Sanchez scored 10 points and senior guard James De La O made two three-point-
