Beach cities make plans for Fourth of July amid pandemic

Laguna opts to close beaches, Huntington to keep them open, as Newport officials wait to decide if they will follow L.A. County's lead due to spike in coronavirus cases.

BY HILLARY DAVIS, MATT SZABO, LILLY NGUYEN

Laguna Beach City Council members voted to close city beaches Tuesday night, as Huntington Beach officials opted to keep them open, and Newport Beach officials waited to decide if they will follow Los Angeles County's lead in shutting down for the Fourth of July weekend because of a spike in coronavirus cases.

A day after Los Angeles County announced it would be closing its beaches for the upcoming weekend because of spiking coronavirus spread, officials in Huntington Beach said the city would be "deploying an enhanced public safety presence at the beaches, while also proactively enforcing regulations against illegal fireworks during the holiday weekend."

Additionally, the city will engage in "public outreach efforts to promote public health and safety to mitigate the spread of COVID-19," according to a press release from Huntington Beach Tuesday night.

Still, Huntington resident Amanda Olson said she would likely be staying home for the holiday. She said she has been more cautious since filming a Black Lives Matter protest downtown on June 20, though she has yet to be tested for the coronavirus. She is also concerned because her 8-year old daughter, Isabella, has asthma.

"Now I'm getting a lot more nervous," Olson said. "The [coronavirus] rates in Orange County and in Huntington are going up. I kind of got a little lax with the social distancing, but my plan is that I'm avoiding downtown indefinitely. As for the beaches, I probably will avoid them this weekend. I'm sure it's going to be crowded. In general, my plan is to lay low this weekend. I'm just resetting back to a couple of months ago, how strict I was being."

Neighboring Newport Beach has given no indication that it will follow Los Angeles County's lead, although it won't have professional fireworks shows or street parades.

Only the American Legion Old Glory boat parade is set for Saturday in Newport Harbor. But Newport lifeguards are prepared for an influx beyond even the typical Fourth of July crush as displaced L.A. beachgoers look for the next-closest sand and surf.

Brian O'Rourke, a Newport lifeguard battalion chief, said the beaches will be staffed similarly to last year, with about 60 people on duty between 35 towers, 10 vehicles, three rescue boats and the headquarters on Newport Pier, with the flexibility to call in reinforcements if the turnout demands it.

With a heat wave forecast for the holiday and expected swells of 5 to 7 feet, this weekend will be "legendary," O'Rourke said. And by that he means busy.

Guards will start their patrols earlier and hold down their towers later, until about 8 p.m., plus add a dispatcher and bring more personnel into the headquarters.

"We're prepared to go," O'Rourke said.

Turnout on the Huntington and Newport shores made news earlier in the pandemic, when a heat wave and waning patience beckoned Californians weary from more than a month of stay-at-home orders.

Although local public safety officials said the crowds were more safely distancing than some photos may have let on — and in Newport, about as heavy as any warm spring weekend — Gov. Gavin Newsom ordered all Orange County beaches closed on April 30. They were reopened for "active use" about a week later, and officially reopened fully earlier this month.

In between, local leaders and residents took umbrage, firing off a spurt of lawsuits claiming the closure was unconstitutional. Huntington Beach sued the state with Newport's support, and Newport City Councilman Kevin Muldoon filed a federal lawsuit against the state. Neither suit was successful.

In addition to heavy lifeguard presence, Newport Beach said it will maintain a strong police presence on the beaches, managing traffic flow in West Newport and Corona del Mar and enforcing parking rules, the city's fireworks ban and the 10 p.m. beach curfew.

The "safety enhancement zone" in West Newport will return with fines for violations such as loud music, unruly parties and

Process in question as C.M. approves furloughs

2 council members say agreements violate policy of transparency in labor negotiations as city moves to reduce workforce in all sectors by 5% in 2020-21.

BY SARA CARDINE

To help balance a 2020-21 budget predominated by coronavirus-related revenue losses, the Costa Mesa City Council recently approved furloughs for city employees across all departments, amounting to $3 million in savings, after negotiating with union leaders.

Carol Molina, the city's budget and purchasing manager, told council members in a special meeting Thursday night that all employee groups were asked to consider furloughs equating to about 5% of the workforce.

Departments were originally asked to consider 10% cuts, Molina clarified, before the city was made aware it was eligible for about $3 million in COVID-19 funding from county, state and federal agencies.

"With the anticipated receipt of the general fund backfill, we reduced that 10% request to 5%," Molina said Thursday. "We have been in talks with the unions as early as May 4, and we've had multiple discussions with them to get to this point."

The furloughs are part of a multi-faceted approach by city leaders to close a $24-million budget gap for 2020-21, the result of revenue losses sustained from the closure of businesses and city facilities that generate millions in taxes, fees and fines.

Council members approved earlier this month making $10.8 million in across-the-board departmental cuts and drawing down $10.2 million in reserve funds earmarked for disasters and economic recovery.

Furloughs were quickly negotiated with representatives from the city's labor union, including the Costa Mesa Police and Fire & Rescue departments, as well as units representing nonunion employee groups.

As such, each labor unit has agreed to 104 hours of furloughed time, in addition to restrictions that would keep employees from cashing out their vacation balances throughout the fiscal year and temporary increases to vacation caps.

Some groups successfully negotiated city matches to employees' retirement health savings plans and asked for contract reopeners in the years ahead that would consider base salary increases, should conditions approve.

Human Resources administrator Kasama Lee said the goal for the city going into talks was to secure the 5% furloughs in the new fiscal year, while keeping things flat in 2021-22 before considering possible modest contract increases in outlying years.

"Had we not been able to reach agreements with the groups, we would need to bring forth an additional $3 million in cuts, in addition

Costa Mesa resident Doris Taylor-Foster turns 100 years old

BY MATT SZABO

Costa Mesa resident Doris Taylor-Foster, who has lived in the city since 1942, turned 100 years old on Monday.

Inside, a big birthday cake could be pictured, and Taylor-Foster held a sign that read, "I Did It! 100 Years."

Hitting the century mark was a goal for Taylor-Foster. "Her grandparents that lived in New York lived to be Montana-born 'stay-at-home mom' who coached baseball moved to SoCal in 1938.

97 and 98," Evelyn Taylor-Johnson said, "and she always thought it would be fun, when she was getting older and older, to live to be 100. That was her goal ... She has such a strong faith. Mom's gone through pneumonia and all kinds of things, but she just fought back. She's made it."

Doris Taylor-Foster stays active at Mesa Verde by playing Bingo and Uno, and she enjoys sing-alongs. She makes FaceTime calls with John and Evelyn on Fridays, and with her daughter, Vicki, who lives in Arizona, on Sundays.

"She was just the old-fashioned mom that was the stay-at-home mom," Evelyn Taylor-Johnson said. "However, she was involved in all of our activities. She loved people."

Born on June 29, 1920, in Missoula, Mont., Doris and her family eventually moved to Laguna Beach when she was in high school. She met Ralph Albert Taylor, who was 20 years older than her, but they were married in February 1938.

They moved to Costa Mesa in 1942, buying three acres on Pacific Avenue drinking in public as much as triple the usual amount. "While we are expecting to see a lot of visitors to our beaches over the Fourth of July weekend, our community can be confident that our police officers are prepared to keep our community safe and maintain an environment where everyone can enjoy the holiday," said City Councilwoman Diane Dixon, who represents Balboa Peninsula, one of the city's most impacted visitor spots.

Certain local streets will be closed from 10:30 a.m. Friday to about 3 a.m. Sunday to maintain traffic flow:
• Southbound Orange Street at West Coast Highway
• Via Oporto from Via Lido to 32nd Street
• Via Malaga from Via

Oporto to Via Lido "Each member of the Newport Beach community and even larger area is first and foremost personally responsible for their own health and well-being," said City Councilman Jeff Herdman, whose Balboa Island district is also a visitor magnet.

"As such, you should always use good judgment in any and every activity you undertake. This is a personal responsibility which is assumed of everyone in our community, and of those who visit our community, as well."

Laguna Beach will close its city beaches on July 4. The Laguna Beach City Council also directed City Manager John Pietig and city staff to close the beaches on July 3 and 5 should other circumstances present themselves before the weekend.

The decisions unanimously Tuesday night.

Unlike its northerly neighbors, Laguna Beach initially closed its beaches in an effort to curb coronavirus cases in March. It reopened in May after marine safety and police officers reported good behavior and compliance from beachgoers.

Casey Parlette, a Laguna Beach resident, said it was complicated to say "yes" or "no" on whether beaches should remain open or closed in the city ahead of the Fourth of July weekend.

"I hear both sides of the argument. I understand why [the city] might want to be closed, but it's a tough thing when everything is closed. When the beaches, trailheads, parks were closed, the only thing that was open was maybe your backyard, if you have one, Council members made

After the war, Ralph started the Laguna Beach Ready-Mix Co. while Doris was a stay-at-home mom for four children, also including Sherrill, who died from appendicitis.

Over the years, Doris Taylor-Foster was a long-time member of the First United Methodist Church, a 4-H leader and a youth baseball coach in Harbor Area Baseball for John, who went on to play baseball at Cal State Fullerton in the late 1960s.

When Ralph retired, she went to work for May Co. in the yardage department at the newly opened South Coast Plaza. She later worked at Westbrook Yardage in Fashion Island and Newport Stationers.

Ralph passed away in 1983 and Doris married Warren Foster, a former high school acquaintance who she saw again at their 60th high school reunion, in 2000.

The Fosters ran a gold leaf pottery business out of Doris and Warren were married for five years before he passed away.

Doris loved to drive on family vacations. Her family currently also consists of eight grandchildren, 16 great-grandchildren and two great-great grandchildren.

and the middle of the street and that was pretty much it," Parlette said. "We were trying to figure out creative ways to get my 3-year-old son out and doing things, but I think that there's a certain amount of implicit responsibility that individuals need to take to not be part of the problem."

"I think if people do that then I think it's a lot easier for things to remain open. A lot of people live down here in [Southern California]. Everybody wants to go somewhere. It's a tough one," Parlette said.

James Pribram, on the other hand, said that he felt that the city needed to close its beaches, describing south Laguna Beach as "the wild, wild west" compared to what he said he saw when city beaches first reopened.

"My concern is that ... the 2½ months we quarantined went out the window and my worry is that we're going to have to do it again," Pribram said.

"If we have to close our beaches over the Fourth of July or another two weeks or a month, so be it. That's better than being closed down the rest of the year. I think that's where we're going."

Newsom added Orange County to his 19-county watch list Monday, putting the area on notice that its reopening could be reversed as the county health department posted concerning metrics of accelerated COVID-19 spread.

On Tuesday, Orange County Health Care Agency Director Dr. Clayton Chau said that he is considering closing bars, as Los Angeles has.

a record 779 new cases of the coronavirus and 10 new related deaths from COVID-19 Tuesday, bringing the total case count to 13,843 known infections, 233,281 tests and 340 deaths over the last four months. Hospitals reported 510 inpatients, with 176 in intensive care.

Testing positivity was at 9.9% and the change in the three-day average of hospitalized patients was up 9.7%. The state has thresholds of 8% testing positivity and 10% for hospitalization increases before stepping in to monitor the situation.

Here are the latest cumulative case counts and deaths for select cities:

- Santa Ana: 2,850 cases; 89 deaths
- Anaheim: 2,591 cases; 84 deaths
- Huntington Beach: 637 cases; 38 deaths
- Irvine: 387 cases; 5 deaths
- Costa Mesa: 342 cases; 2 deaths
- Newport Beach: 295 cases; 2 deaths
- Fountain Valley: 120 cases; 6 deaths
- Laguna Beach: 61 cases; 0 deaths

Huntington Beach resident Gina Clayton-Tarvin, who is president of the Ocean View School District Board of Trustees, said it is important for the city to follow the state's directives on the beaches.

That can include free access.

"Orange County has seen fewer cases in relation to L.A. County or San Diego County per capita, but I don't know if that's a function of fewer cases or if it's a function of lack of testing," she said. "For this weekend, I think we should look to the California Department of Health. If they're not saying that our beaches need to be closed ... then we should enjoy the holiday weekend. Independence Day is something to be celebrated in our nation, but we have to celebrate responsibly. Being an American means that you're free, but freedom comes with great responsibility."

"I have always been fairly conservative in my opinions on how to deal with the outbreak," Clayton-Tarvin said, calling the COVID-19 growth statewide "alarming." "[Earlier in the pandemic], I can tell you from the Ocean View School District's point of view, at that time we had actually shut all of our school grounds down. We are the biggest provider of open space in the city of Huntington Beach. We operate 312 acres of space ... and the majority of it is in Huntington Beach.

"We have reopened our fields, we are saying that the public should come and recreate again, because we understand that it's very hard to be inside all of the time."

to what was already cut, and that would include possible workforce reductions," Lee told the council.

Council members largely praised staff for working so quickly on negotiating the cuts before the July 1 start of the new fiscal year.

"It's really remarkable that these agreements have been negotiated at an arm's length and in good faith, for the benefit of the community, to try and fill a hole in our budget under very difficult circumstances," said Mayor Pro Tem John Stephens.

Council members Sandy Genis and Allan Mansoor objected to the fact that quickly reached agreements seeking immediate council approval seemed to violate city policy requiring transparency in labor negotiations and making accommodations for public review and input.

Policy 300-8 says proposals and counterproposals must be publicly available and that tentative agreements reached between negotiating parties be posted at least seven days before a council vote.

It also requires council members to report communications they have with representatives of employee groups regarding terms of the negotiations.

"I don't actually have problems with the agreements themselves," Genis said, "but I do have some concerns about the process."

Mayor Katrina Foley defended staff and City Manager Lori Ann Farrell Harrison — who led negotiations but could neither post agreements with prior notice nor attend Thursday's meeting due to a family emergency — for acting with urgency in an uncommon situation.

"We are in the middle of a pandemic. We are trying to balance the budget in an economic crisis of a kind that no one has ever heard of in more than 100 years," Foley said. "This criticism of our staff not following policy — it's just, frankly, offensive."

Ultimately, the council voted 6-1 to approve and adopt side letters of agreement with its employee groups and resolutions necessary to grant the furloughs. Mansoor cast the lone dissenting vote.
