"This is my happy place, or one of them," said Zak, who works as a flight attendant for Delta Airlines. "When I get off work, this is my escape."

For the first time since March, the happy place is once again open for business. Texas-based Cinemark started showing movies there again

That's in line with the state reopening guidelines, as Orange County moved from the purple tier to the less-restrictive red tier on Tuesday.

According to the Orange County Health Care Agency, 11 of the lives lost were skilled nursing facility residents.

BY ANDREW TURNER

The Orange County Health Care Agency reported 12 deaths due to the coronavirus and 147 new infections in the latest data released on Saturday.

That brings the total number of fatalities in the county due to the pandemic to 1,093. Cumulatively, there have been 50,760 cases of COVID-19, the disease caused by the virus, among county residents.

From the deaths reported by the healthcare agency on Saturday, 11 of the lives lost were skilled nursing facility residents. At present, there are 215 cases of the virus that require hospitalization, and 65 of the patients are in intensive care units.

There were 8,558 tests reported in the last day, bringing the total number of tests administered to 732,422. An estimated 45,126 recoveries have been made countywide from a bout with the

BY MATT SZABO

The Corona del Mar High School athletic department has new leadership for the 2020-21 school year, but he is a familiar face.

The school has hired Dennis Wilbanks as its new athletic director, he said Friday.

Wilbanks takes over for Don Grable, who said he retired after 32 years in education, including the past 11 as CdM's athletic director, so he could spend more time with friends and family.

Wilbanks, who has been a special education teacher at the school since 2014, is no stranger to the athletic program. He was the offensive line coach for the CdM football team for 10 years, before taking the same role the last two years at Mater

"I was turning 50 this year," Wilbanks said. "I was like, 'What do I want to do? What's my end game?' All the while,

NARP Clothing plans to empower former college student-athletes

BY ANDREW TURNER

A great debate surrounding collegiate athletics has been whether a student-athlete should be allowed to profit from their name, image and likeness.

KJ Bryant and Cromwell believe that college athletes should be able to reap the benefits of their hard work.

Formerly teammates in the Clemson University baseball program for the 2017 season, the duo was reunited when Bryant joined his sister on her business trip to Europe last year.

After finishing his college career, Cromwell had been playing abroad, first in Australia and then in Germany. Bryant joined his friend to catch up along the Rhine River, where he pitched Cromwell on an idea.

The plan was to allow former student-athletes to profit via their name, image and likeness through sale of their team-issued gear. That led to the for-letic regular person. Clemson fans have a tradition called "Solid Orange Friday," Bryant said. One Friday while working a summer internship in 2019, Bryant wore a Clemson baseball travel polo to work, and a superior told him that he would pay him $60 for the shirt.

NARP

NARP stands for nonath-

"My mind just got racing," Bryant said. "I went home and had all of my Clemson stuff. It was in a box. It was almost collecting dust, so I just got on the computer and I created an informal business plan back in July [2019]."

Cromwell, 25, a Costa Mesa resident who went to Calvary Chapel School, gave his stamp of approval on the pitch. Bryant asked him to be his cofounder, and the two of them have been working together since.

They started looking for athletes to bring aboard in their old backyard at Clemson.

The co-founders noted that the Clemson paw was a recognizable brand, especially due to the football program's run of success, and figured if they could not sell Clemson gear, they could not sell anything else.

They also wanted to know if fans were only interested in high-profile athlete gear or team-issued gear that was not accessible to everyone.

The items were uploaded to the website, and each athlete was provided their own "locker," where their items would be listed to sell.

As athletes experienced success, word got out about NARP Clothing.

"They will send us photos of the gear they would like to sell, and then KJ and I will upload the items to their locker, list them for sale, and then as soon as an item is sold, we will send them a prepaid shipping label that will go into a custom poly mailer that we will send them," Cromwell said of the business model.

He added that every athlete is researched to ensure that they are not current student-athletes and they do not have remaining eligibility.

Bryant and Cromwell anticipate NARP Clothing becoming more than just a marketplace to connect former college studentathletes with their fans.

They are planning on introducing NARP Academy, which will allow for high school athletes to reach out to some of their participating athletes for advice on topics such as recruiting and workouts over a video chat.

"Sometimes, the best advice comes from someone you don't know, but they've been in your shoes," said Bryant, 24, who earned a master's degree in public administration from the College of Charleston.

Cromwell said that NARP Clothing allows the athlete to set their own price for the gear. Athletes can use the money as they wish, and in some cases, they have chosen to support causes.

Megan Whittle, who played women's lacrosse at the University of Maryland, said in a video on her locker that she is donating all the money she receives from selling items on the site to Black Lives Matter.

Alex Martens, who played softball at the University of Kentucky, said she plans to donate half of the proceeds from her sold gear to Special Olympics Kentucky.

Cromwell said that the website will soon become a platform for former collegiate athletes to share their stories about life after their playing careers.

"In the near future, we have a vlog series that will be coming out called, 'NARP Life,' which highlights our [athletes]," Cromwell said.

"It gives them the ability to share some of the struggles that they went through during this weird transitioning phase from your athletic career to your post-athletic career."

The time to fix Orange County's childcare is now

hildcare has come under intense focus during the COVID-19 pandemic as tens of millions of children across the nation suddenly found themselves on extended breaks from regular childcare and parents were thrust into a life-altering dilemma: working from home while simultaneously educating and supporting their young chil-

The pandemic closed schools and childcare programs, drawing increased attention to an already existing challenge. Even before the pandemic, recent studies revealed that businesses in each state lose more than $1 billion in productivity and revenue each year as a result of breakdowns in childcare options available to working parents.

Two studies in San Diego earlier this year drew a direct line between economic growth and childcare availability. The studies' follow-up reports stressed the critical importance of all sectors of the community stepping up and playing major roles in supporting working parents by expanding childcare options.

The studies also revealed the additional challenges first responders, healthcare, hospitality and retail workers face in seeking childcare for their children, due to often unpredictable and nonstandard work schedules

The takeaway is clear: Inadequate childcare and the enormous emotional and financial toll it exacts on families has a huge impact on local economies.

Working parents have long been aware of the compromises faced while balancing career and childcare challenges. Now, with early care and education settings shuttered, business and philanthropic leaders also recognize that the profound lack of quality childcare makes both returning to and staying in the workforce difficult — if not impossible — for many working families.

The coronavirus pandemic has brought to light what these studies show, that our existing childcare system has been fragile and all too susceptible to economic injury for a long time and cannot survive the additional stressors created by the pandemic without community support.

That's why First 5 Orange County is currently helping spearhead a major study to uncover the severity of the problem locally. Working with our community partners including the Orange County Business Council, First 5 Orange County will use the findings to chart a strategic course to expand high-quality childcare options. Childcare is an essential, foundational, necessary step to rebuilding the local economy. Thankfully, growing numbers of local employers, government leaders, school districts, labor experts, CEOs and community organizations have already begun exploring ways to ease the childcare crisis. One resource to help families currently struggling to find childcare is this database of open childcare centers created by First 5 OC partner Early Childhood OC

I hope these collaborative efforts will trigger a silver lining of this tragic pandemic, by building a laser-focused commitment to finally addressing the childcare crisis across Orange County and the nation.

Letters, actions in Congress speak to Rouda's responsibility

The opinion Russ Neal expressed in a recent Daily Pilot Mailbag shows only partisan politics

Rep. Harley Rouda has tried to support nonpartisan approaches in his time in Congress.

One great example is his support for the Energy Innovation and Carbon Dividend Act of 2019, H.R. 763. This bill will solve climate change in a way that both parties should support.

There is no question that the pandemic has had a significant effect on the work of firefighters, police and other first responders.

So has the climate crisis. I am not sure what Mr. Neal could expect Rouda to do for firefighters, police and other first responders in Orange County, but Rouda's stand on H.R. 763 will certainly help if others will join to pass it. What has O.C. Supervisor Michelle Steel done "in the trenches" that helps firefighters, police and other first responders?

> Jim Martin Huntington Beach

Russ Neal misrepresents the letter addressed to Gov. Newsom and Orange County supervisors from congressional Reps. Rouda, Cisneros, Levin, Lowenthal and Far from offering "no suggestions," Rouda and the others call for more testing, particularly to protect first responders, noting that they voted for the bipartisan CARES Act which allocated $554 million to Orange County, money the supervisors should be using for this purpose. Rouda also points out that the Heroes Act, approved by the House in May and rejected by Senate Republicans, would have provided $1.8 billion to Orange County, safeguarding critical personnel like first responders.

The writer apparently favors Michelle Steel's approach, downplaying the virus, refusing a mask mandate, pretending, like Trump, that it will all go away like a mira-

Bob Taylor Newport Beach

Russ Neal criticized Rep. Harley Rouda because the congressman wrote to local authorities expressing his concern for the safety of COVID-19 first responders.

Mr. Neal felt that Rouda should, instead, "take responsibility for something," and "call for specific action." Harley did both. He took responsibility for helping to pass the bipartisan CARES Act, which allocated $554 million to Orange County. He also arranged for the HEROES Act to allocate an additional $1.8 billion to Orange County. The Senate took no action on that.

Not having local authority to act himself, he then wrote to recommend that local authorities take specific action to remedy the lack of available COVID-19 testing and the significant delays in receiving results, in order to better safeguard first responders as well as the public.

It's worth noting that Rouda's letter also praised local Republican authorities for encouraging the use of masks.

Christopher Hilger

I am pretty sure that letter writer Russ Neal never bothered to look up any of Rep. Harley Rouda's accomplishments in his less than two years in office.

I am pretty sure he does not know or care about his three measures signed into law, his 31 measures passed in the House and his 60 measures introduced.

He is probably unaware of the 577 measures co-sponsored (60% being bipartisan). His accomplishments dwarf the entire output of his Republican predecessor over his decades in office.

Rouda's GOP opponent, Supervisor Michelle Steel, may have been "in the trenches," but it was making disastrous decisions to open our local economy and schools early without adequate protection and planning for the coronavirus pandemic.

Rouda chairs one subcommittee in Congress (Oversight and Government Reform Committee), something Steel would never be able to do in a Democrat-controlled House of Representatives. He has pull for a freshman congressman in serving his constituents in Orange County, something Steel could not match. Rouda is doing plenty and has exercised plenty of leadership. If this is "small ball," it is scoring plenty of runs.

Tim Geddes Huntington Beach

Two letters appeared in the the Daily Pilot today, both of which were from Huntington Beach

Tim Geddes wants to see debates between candidates we will be voting for. It's a good idea; I agree with it.

The other, from Russ Neal, criticizes Rep. Harley Rouda. Mr. Neal feels that the congressman has done little to warrant reelection. Has he considered Rouda's activity on behalf of climate and the environment? I have.

I am close to the climate and environmental communities both local and national and have written and educated on these topics for decades. I have also heard the congressman in person speak about these issues. Few issues coronavirus included — are as critical as the worldwide global warming emergency.

Rouda signed on to climate bill HR763 in Congress as soon as it was introduced. I thank him for his leadership.

Rep. Harley Rouda has been an intelligent, empathetic, evenhanded presence in Congress. He's prioritized issues like taxes, climate change and healthcare, which affect all Orange County residents, and unlike his opponent, he's promoted a safe, sensible response to the coronavirus Rouda and I don't agree on every issue; we don't need to. After far too many years of being alternately terrified and humiliated by my congressional representative, I'm thrilled to know that someone smart and honest is speaking for my district, and I'm not interested in going backward. I'm proud to vote for Harley Rouda once again.

Eliza Rubenstein Costa Mesa

In a rambling letter to the Daily Pilot, Russ Neal essentially accuses Rep. Harley Rouda of not doing anything. I wonder if he would have written a similar letter to the Mailbag about former Rep. Dana Rohrbacher, who had no legislation enacted and accomplished virtually nothing during his legislative tenure.

Rouda has had several (many with bipartisan support) bills enacted. His office responds promptly with requests. A friend (Republican) recently had a problem with a lost U.S. passport and got rapid assistance from Rouda's

When the Heroes Act was passed by Congress there was a provision that allowed taxpayers who had withdrawn Minimum Required Distribution funds from an IRA to redeposit the funds with consequent tax savings. The bill only allowed this for folks who had made withdrawals during a short 30-day window before the bill's passage.

New rule might be the final nail in the coffin

There appears to be an underlying current at a recent Newport Beach City Council meeting, as there is an emergency ordinance being considered for restaurants and bars to mandate wearing masks and implement, a "one person, one seat" policy. The restaurants and bars have been closed for months and are barely surviving serving people outside, as indoor dining is prohibited; yet, the City Council is now considering pounding yet another "nail in the coffin," further punishing our local restaurants and bars.

Offenders of this emergency ordinance, if adopted, will be fined $100 and the fine for the second violation will be $200 and a third violation within a sixmonth period, $500. Who is going to police this edict or should Newport Beach create another bureaucracy, perhaps, the "Bar and Bounty Stalkers"?

As of Aug. 31, San Diego County has implemented a "safe-reopening" plan that includes restaurants, places of worship, movie theaters, museums, gyms and fitness centers, zoos and aquariums, hair salons and barbershops, nail salons and tattoo parlors. In some cases the guidance includes maximum capacity and they can still continue their outdoor operations. It is time for Orange County to follow suit.

The government needs to stop regulating our freedoms by trusting and allowing the people to make their own best, informed educated decisions. By trying to command and control us will only continue to crush the economy and the human spirit.

Interestingly enough, this proposed ordinance is just for restaurants and bars and ironically, one of the candidates running for City Council owns a restaurant and bar in Newport

Ask yourself, if this is a true emergency or is it simply political power prevailing over common sense?

Local climate lobbyists see common ground for bipartisan action

he U.S. Geological Survey predicts that two thirds of California's beaches could be lost to climate change by the end of the century.

According to new research, rising sea levels will annually flood all of Balboa Island and the entire Balboa peninsula by

With the loss of beaches and billions of dollars in coastal property, coastal communities stand to be among the biggest losers to global warming.

In January 2018, city of Newport Beach staff and UCI consultants warned that seas could rise as much as 5½ feet by 2100, and adaptation costs to taxpayers could approach $1 billion.

Without question, our local as well as our planetary home are in grave danger. Scientists have identified the problem, and it's now up to our political leaders to fix it.

Since the climate crisis is a global problem, political leaders around the world will need to promote government policies that transition us away from fossil-fuel economies to ones powered by clean energy.

This transition must be started without delay and accomplished in a way that is socially and economically just. And, in America, to endure changes in political power, history shows that bipartisan support is essential.

One sign of hope across party lines is the rapid growth of Citizens' Climate Lobby (CCL). In Orange County alone this nonpartisan grassroots organization has hundreds of volunteers, Republicans and Democrats, organized in chapters located in each of its six congressional districts.

Yet, is there any hope that Republicans and Democrats can find common ground on climate policy? They appear to be miles apart.

President Trump and most Republicans currently in office seem to belie any chance for bipartisan action.

The most recent Republican plan ignores the scale of the problem, focusing on planting trees and encouraging carbon capture and storage technologies.

It offers no incentives, through taxes or regulatory standards, to transition to a noncarbonenergy future. This approach accepts the continuation of fossil-fueled economies.

There is, however, an "old guard" of Republicans, including former Secretary of State George Shultz and former Treasury Secretary James Baker, who accept climate science and understand the urgent need to reduce carbon pollution.

Their Climate Leadership Council promotes a market-based, fee and dividend carbon pricing approach.

Gradually rising fees on fossil fuels are returned as dividends to citizens. Border adjustments protect U.S. businesses and workers, while incentivizing other countries to adopt similar policies.

This approach has the support of leading economists and major business leaders who believe it provides the fastest most powerful way to cut carbon emissions while safeguarding low- and middle-income households.

Democrats have long favored carbon pricing. Indeed, since 2013 Democrats have introduced 26 carbon pricing bills, including eight that are currently before Congress.

Most recently, Democratic presidential nominee Joe Biden as well as House and Senate Democrats released comprehensive climate plans that encourage or at least recognize the value of this approach.

The fact that carbon pricing has advocates in both political parties singles it out as the most promising common ground for bipartisan action.

An even greater cause for hope is the fact that the most popular carbon pricing bill currently before Congress, with 82 co-sponsors, the Energy Innovation Act (HR-763), employs the same fee and dividend approach advocated by the Republican Climate Leadership Council.

Locally, this legislation also has the support of Orange County Reps. Harley Rouda, Katie Porter, Lou Correa, Gil Cisneros and Mike Levin, as well as the city councils of Costa Mesa and Santa Ana.

In the end, it may be voters who insist on bipartisan climate action. Current polls routinely show that voters of all persuasions continue to be deeply concerned, even during the current coronavirus pandemic.

The climate crisis is urgent. To avert its worst impacts, locally and globally, our political leaders must come together on a way forward. Carbon fee and dividend policies could provide the necessary common ground.

'As well as' and its misleading connective cousins

ast week, we learned two things: "As well as" is hard to use and you use it well anyway.

This week, I take it back. The truth is "as well as" is easy, and you, if you're anything like the writers I edit, are really blowing it.

How can I explain this contradiction? Easy. "As well as" has different applications. It can join two nouns that are the subject of a sentence, "John as well as Jane is here." In these cases, it's hard to know whether you want a singular verb like "is" or a plural verb like "are." Inexplicably, everyone handles these situations well.

But "as well as" can also add an item to the end of a list: "Specialties include pasta, steaks, chops and fresh seafood, as well as craft cocktails." That's where people mess up, instead structuring sentences like this: "Specialties include pasta, steaks, chops, fresh seafood, as well as craft cocktails."

Notice how the "and" before fresh seafood has disappeared. The result: a grammatical error based on the belief that, because "as well as" works kind of like "and," it can replace "and." Not so.

"And" is classified as a coordinating conjunction and, as a member of that club, it has a special power: It can be used in lists to signal that the next item will be the last item in the list. You don't say the flag is red, white, blue. You say it's red, white and blue. You don't say your piggy bank contains pennies, nickels, dimes, quarters. You say it contains pennies, nickels, dimes and quarters.

"As well as" can't do
"and's" job in those situations because it's not a coordinating conjunction.
Some people call it a quasi-coordinator because it has some properties of
"and" but not all. Garner's

Sarah Bennett

GRAMMAR COLUMNIST June Casagrande says "as well as craft cocktails" is correct in the sentence "Specialties include pasta, steaks, chops and fresh seafood, as well as craft cocktails" because of the "and" between "chops" and "fresh seafood."

Modern American Usage calls "as well as" a "misleading connective" for reasons you can easily glean. It connects things, but it misleads people as to how those connections work.

The result is a regular barrage of sentences like this in my editing work: "Every dish is made with fresh fish, served with soy sauce, ginger, spicy wasabi, as well as miso soup." My job, the service for which I get paid the big bucks, is to insert "and" before "spicy wasabi" and leave the rest of the sentence as is.

This problem is most common when one of the items in the list contains its own internal "and," like "peanut butter and jelly." Consider: "Sandwiches on the menu include turkey, tuna, peanut butter and jelly, as well as salami." That's a mistake. For purposes of this list, "peanut butter and jelly" make up one item, not two. It's a sandwich. So before the last sandwich in the list. you need an "and." Only after you've completed the list can you tack on "as well as": Sandwiches on the menu include turkey, tuna and peanut butter and jelly, as well as salami.

"As well as" isn't the only member of the misleading connectives club. "Along with" misleads, too, as in, "Major industries are agriculture, energy, manufacturing, along with information technology."

"Coupled with" is another culprit, as seen in this error I came across recently: "This holiday anticipation coupled with 2019 findings mean there is even greater urgency to start your holiday marketing plans now." That sentence should have a singular verb, "means," because the subject is singular, "anticipation."

Rounding out our lineup of misleading connectives are "accompanied by," "added to" and "together with" — all of which connect things but not in the same way that "and" does.

So remember, just because a term can add a noun to a list doesn't mean it works like "and." "As well as" and its misleading cousins just don't possess all the powers of "and."

Laguna women's group awards scholarships to O.C. reentry college students

The Laguna Beach branch of the American Assn. of University Women, an organization that promotes gender equity, has awarded scholarships to 12 women returning to college.

The scholarships will go to the following reentry students representing four Orange County institutions: Orange Coast College's Valerie Fernandez, Stacey Mori, Helen Thome, Jenny Ortega and Abigail Andressoo; UC Irvine's Aliyah Clayton and Grace Lee; and Laguna College of Art and Design's Jennifer Schmidt.

Patricia Reyes, Liz Clark, Jessica Trujillo and Kailee Cabrera all take classes at Saddleback College.

"In general, applicants must be women who have had to take a break in their educational journeys and have returned to school to continue," Lesley Danziger, the president of AAUW's Laguna Beach branch, said in a statement. "Thus, they are usually mature students. The students must also be in financial need and they must be on track to complete a certificate training course or an associate or bachelor's de-

Danziger added that about 60 students applied for the scholarships, which range between $2,000 and $3,000.

The organization plans to raise funds for local high school and college students in the upcoming year.

Those wishing to donate to the scholarship fund can go to lagunabeach-ca.aauw.net.

Orange County Community Foundation sets 'giving day'

The Orange County Community Foundation will host an online "giving day" to support nonprofits serving Orange County youth on Sept. 23.

The event, called "Igniting Potential," is part of a series of collaborative Giving Days organized by the OCCF, aimed to boost the capacity of local nonprofits that are providing vital services in the midst of the COVID-19 pandemic.

The organization aims to raise $125,000 for 11 nonprofits, including Assistance League Irvine; Helping Others Prepare for Eternity (H.O.P.E.); Irvine Public Schools Foundation; Kid Healthy; KidWorks; MOMS Orange County; Orange County Council, Boy Scouts of America; Pretend City Children's Museum; Parentis Foundation; Scholar's Hope and The Youth Center.

"As our community rises to the challenges of the pandemic, we continue to see tremendous strength and potential in collaboration," said Shelley Hoss, president and CEO of OCCF, in a statement. "We are so proud to support 'Igniting Potential' and these 11 nonprofits as they work collectively to serve youth in Orange County in these challenging times."

Silent walk to support Newport Beach police

A silent walk to support the Newport Beach Police Department will be on Sunday, starting at 9 a.m.

Participants will meet at 8:30 a.m. at the corners of Newport Center drives, near Fashion Island, and will walk in a single file line — 6 feet apart — to the Newport Beach Police Department at 870 Santa Barbara Drive to cheer and applaud.

Organizers said that the walk is not political.

Interested parties are suggested to bring a "Thin Blue Line" flag. Participants are also encouraged to wear "brilliant" blue, navy or black clothing.

Sherman Library & Gardens displays garden-inspired art

Original garden-inspired art pieces are now on display in the Cafe Jardin at Sherman Library & Gardens in Corona del Mar. As part of the Newport Beach Garden Tour, artists are featured at each private residence on the tour. Artists are then invited to capture points of interests in their work throughout their assigned gardens. This year's artists include Andrea Holte, Cathy Hull, Mike Ishikawa, Jai Kim, Carol Kreider, Yuma Lynch, Ellen Small and Lesa Vander Bie.

Interested buyers can visit the cafe to purchase the artwork until Wednesday. The cafe will be open daily from 10:30 a.m. until 4 p.m. Proceeds from sale of artwork will go toward children's education programs at the Sherman Library & Gardens.

in Costa Mesa at South Coast Plaza. AMC also announced that it reopened locations in Anaheim, Orange and Tustin on Friday, with the Fullerton theater following on Saturday.

Each theater chain has announced enhanced safety protocols.

At each chain, face masks are mandatory for employees and patrons. They may be removed in the theater only for eating or drinking.

"We are disinfecting every auditorium every morning, and again before every showtime," Cinemark vice president of investor relations and public relations Chanda Brashears said. "We're also sanitizing all hard surfaces every 30 minutes. To ensure the highest level of these clean and safety standards are adhered to, we have assigned a Chief Clean and Safety Monitor for each theater shift."

Theaters have instituted an automatic buffering system to promote social distancing in each location. Some seats will be unavailable to purchase. What is still available are concessions like popcorn and soft drinks.

Brashears said Cinemark is also offering private watch parties for up to 20 people.

Costa Mesa resident Joe Wakely, 20, said he feels safe back at the theater. He and girlfriend Jessica Garcia went to a showing of "The New Mutants" at the Bella Terra location on Friday. On Saturday, the plan was to hit up the Big Newport theater to see the new film directed by Christopher Nolan, "Tenet."

"We're going on a whole movie spree right now," Wakely said. "For me, I love it."

It makes sense that Wakely, a film major at Orange Coast College, is happy to be back in theaters. He hopes to transfer to the Chapman University Dodge College of Film, with the ultimate goal of becoming a cinematographer.

"Opening movie theaters, it gets people out," Wakely said. "I feel like if it's done right, it's safe. I'd say it's something that we need again this year, as things start slowly getting back [to normal].

"[Safety] is the biggest question you're going to have to think about. I know movie theaters are doing things differently, like Regal's doing stuff different, AMC's doing stuff different. It really depends on how they handle it. If they handle it good, then yeah, it's going to be good, but if it's poorly handled then that could be a problem."

Los Angeles County remains in the purple tier for reopening, meaning movie theaters are closed. Eduardo Bernabe and Yainel Casillas said they traveled all the way from Santa Clarita to Huntington Beach on Friday to watch "The New Mutants."

"We really missed movie theaters, especially with the air being so bad outside," Casillas said.

NUMBER

hassle. Federal regulations allow telecom customers to switch their phone number at no cost from one service provider to another, a procedure known as "porting."

"I've had this number since 1976," Gross told me. "It's older than my kids. I wanted to keep it."

As you've no doubt surmised, this turned out to be easier said than done.

When the couple upgraded with Spectrum, the company said it would handle everything. It gave them a temporary phone number until the porting process could be com-

Days passed. The old number was AWOL.

"I kept calling Spectrum to ask what was going on," Gross said. "They kept saying Frontier wasn't releasing our number."

Brown called as well. He said Frontier eventually acknowledged that it closed down the couple's account before the number was confirmed to have been transferred.

"They said that if we wanted our old number, we'd have to reopen our account for a month and pay a $25 fee," he recalled. "I told them they were holding our number hostage," Brown said. "But they wouldn't budge. I finally had to hang up because I was frustrated."

Well, that's no good. But why not pay the $25 fee and get the matter done

"No!" replied Gross. "It's the principle of the thing!" Added her husband: "It's a shady business practice. We're not going to give them more money."

I wrote recently about how customer service seems to have worsened during the COVID-19 pandemic, with many service reps working remotely or buried under a backlog of requests for help.

A study last year in the Harvard Business Review anticipated these troubles, finding that the average American consumer spends 13 hours a year stuck on hold trying to resolve problems.

Researchers concluded that in many cases, businesses deliberately make it as tough as possible for customers to resolve issues.

"This structure, we argue, keeps a lid on the amount of redress customers are willing to seek," they said. "In other words, by forcing customers to jump through hoops, the organization helps curb its redress payouts."

Brown told me he thinks Frontier's current financial woes have affected its customer service. The company, which racked up $17.5 billion in debt while acquiring Verizon's assets, filed for bankruptcy protection in April. "We never had a problem before," Brown said. "Now they seem to be playing hardball with people."

His anger, however, may be misplaced. Or not.

Although Gross and Brown said they were told by Spectrum that Frontier messed things up, Frontier says Spectrum was actually the one that let them down.

Javier Mendoza, a Frontier spokesman, said an investigation into the situation revealed that Frontier transferred the couple's number to Spectrum the same day they requested the change. "It appears the new carrier did not activate the telephone number and canceled the port request, thus leaving the phone number in Frontier's pool," he told me.

Putting the number back in the pool meant it no longer belonged to Gross and Brown. It was at that point available to anyone.

"As a courtesy, Frontier will temporarily reestablish the account at no charge and coordinate with the other carrier to complete the transfer of the phone number," Mendoza said.

Spectrum is telling a different story.

Dennis Johnson, a company spokesman, said
Spectrum didn't cancel the port request, regardless of what Frontier says. And he said Spectrum, not Frontier, stepped up to make things right after I got in touch.

"We contacted Frontier and worked with them to transfer the phone number to Spectrum Voice without additional charges," Johnson said.

More than a few readers, I'm sure, are shaking their heads at the spectacle of two huge companies pointing fingers at each other and vying to take credit for fixing a problem that shouldn't have existed in the first place.

And we, as consumers, are supposed to deal with that?

If you're having customer-service issues during these strange times, don't lose hope. Some tips:

• First and foremost, be polite. These are crazy days as well for service reps, nearly all of whom aren't to blame for their companies' penny-pinching practices. A little civility goes a long

• Don't be shy about escalating. Front-line service reps are frequently not given the power to resolve matters on their own and will often give an unsatisfactory response. Ask to speak with a supervisor.

• If that doesn't work, write to the company's chief executive or president, detailing the nature of the problem and providing as much documentation as possible.

Most big companies have special dispute-resolution departments at senior levels.

• Be persistent. If it becomes clear that you're not going away, some companies will finally throw in the towel and offer the response you're seeking. Squeaky wheels and all that.

What happened to Gross and Brown is yet another example of how customer service could be immeasurably improved if service reps were empowered to handle things on their own.

As it stands, most reps are confined to dead-end scripts and have no authority to resolve unusual problems. A little digging on Frontier's part at the outset could have revealed the nature of the issue, saving a pair of departing customers — possibly returning customers down the road — a lot of grief and wasted time.

By the same token, Spectrum could have done its own due diligence when a pair of upgrading customers reported a snafu, rather than immediately dumping all the blame on Frontier.

Moreover, it's pretty obvious in hindsight that you don't hit people with a nickel-and-dime fee just to fix a problem not of the customer's making.

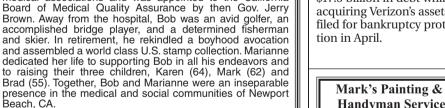

Like I said up top, the stakes here are small — 25 bucks. But Gross was correct: It's the principle of the thing.

"Whoever dropped the ball, this just never should have happened," she said after her phone number was restored.

"I just hope it doesn't happen to anyone else," Gross said.

Bob and Marianne Hinrichs came to Corona del Mar from New York City. They both grew up on Long Island, New York, and met each other one hot summer night when they were home from college. Marianne majored in home economics at William Smith College, Geneva, NY, and Bob was pre-med at Amherst College, Amherst, MA. They were married on June 28, 1952, in New York City, while Bob was completing his M.D. at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, PA. While he was training, Marianne worked as a cafeteria supervisor with AT&T, displaying a knack for solving problems and directing operations. Bob completed his residency in general surgery at Roosevelt Hospital in Manhattan, sub-specializing in reconstructive hand surgery under the mentorship of surgical icons William Patterson, Frederick Amendola and William Littler. In Germany during the two years of Bob's Army medical service, the young couple made life-long friends – friends who would soon help them gravitate towards southern California. Bob and Marianne were active socially at Hoag Hospital, Big Canyon Country Club, the Balboa Bay Club, and with the Philharmonic Society of Orange County. Wilbanks said he planned to be an assistant athletic director this school year, but he stepped up to the plate when Grable stepped down. He said he was hired in August, and that he needs to get his P.E. credential to keep the job.

Wilbanks is part of a new leadership group at the school. Josh Hill is the school's first-year principal, replacing Kathy Scott, who retired in June after seven years in charge. The Newport-Mesa Unified School District also has a new superintendent, Russell Lee-Sung.

Grable said he's sure that Wilbanks, who lives in Irvine with his wife, Stephanie, and their son, Tucker, will do a good job.

"He's just a very passionate, fun, dedicated person," Grable said. "He loves the students, and he knows it's about the students. That's what's cool about Dennis."

Dennis Wilbanks

CdM football head coach Dan O'Shea said that Wilbanks has been an integral part of the program. In 2011, O'Shea's first year with the program as a defensive coordinator under Scott Meyer, Wilbanks served as O'Shea's defensive line coach. O'Shea said that Wilbanks was the most important individual in the successful transition from former coach Jason Hitchens to the new staff.

The 2011 CdM football team went 12-2 and won the first of three straight CIF Southern Section Southern Division titles.

"He's done a phenomenal job developing as a coach, as a leader, as a mentor," O'Shea said. "When you talk about work ethic, as a coach, you hope your assistant coaches bring that work ethic to the table. Dennis Wilbanks does not have a peer in terms of work ethic ... I know nobody will outwork him and we really look forward to having him on board in that new role."

Wilbanks now is involved.

Wilbanks now is involved with every CdM sport, not just football, though becoming an athletic director is particularly challenging this school year with a modified athletic calendar. He said he will be doing some learning on the job, but he has a solid support system in place including Grable, district administration and athletic directors at other schools.

"We have great coaches and a great whole athletic department, and they know how to communicate and work well with each other," he said.

"I want to continue that "I want to continue that, and figure out how I can best serve my coaches to serve our students. That's kind of my philosophy, because the bottom line is that if we didn't have the kids, we wouldn't be here."

Laguna Beach's Nicole Struss, Marina's Emma Marsh earn CIF Player of the Year honors

Laguna Beach High junior center Nicole Struss was named the CIF Southern Section Division 1 Player of the Year in girls' water polo, while Marina senior goalkeeper Emma Marsh earned the Division 6 Player of the Year award.

Struss helped the Breakers to their second straight Division 1 championship, and Marsh led the Vikings to their first CIF title since 1998.

Laguna Beach's Ethan Damato received the Division 1 Coach of the Year honor. Marina's Tamara Towgood was the Division 6 Coach of the Year.

She helped the Breakers rally past Foothill 7-6 for Division 1 title, and beat the Bishop's School of La Jolla 17-8 for the CIF Southern California Regional Division I crown.

Marsh made a CIF Southern Section singleseason record 452 saves for the Vikings (22-12, 2-4 in Wave League), who beat La Cañada Flintridge Prep 6-4 for the Division 6 title. The Vikings, the thirdplace team from the Wave League, made the CIF Southern California Regional Division III semifinals before losing 3-2 in sudden death to Imperial Beach Mar Vista.

Laguna Beach junior attackers Emma Lineback and Molly Renner also earned All-CIF Division 1 honors, as did Newport Harbor junior center Olivia Giolas and sophomore attackers Taylor Smith and Morgan Netherton.

Lineback, a left-hander, led the Breakers with 80 goals, was second on the team with 59 assists and added 32 steals. Renner finished with 63 goals, 43 assists and 34 steals.

Giolas, Smith Netherton helped the Surf League runner-up Sailors (23-9, 4-2) advance to the Division 1 semifinals for the first time since 2015 before losing 9-7 to Laguna Beach.

Corona del Mar High senior goalkeeper Maya Avital, bound for Stanford, was an All-CIF selection in Division 2. The Sea Kings (12-16, 2-4) failed to earn an at-large berth into the Division 2 playoffs.

Edison junior center Sam Worley was an All-CIF selection in Division 4. Worley, who led Edison with 73 goals, guided the Wave League runner-up Chargers (18-14, 4-2) to the CIF semifinals for the first time in program history

BOYS' BASKETBALL

F.V.'s Jeremiah Davis among 4 local All-CIF selections

Fountain Valley High junior guard Jeremiah Davis has earned All-CIF Southern Section Division 3A honors in boys' basketball after helping the Barons advance to the CIF semifinals for the first time in program history.

Pacifica Christian Orange County senior wing player Iudah Brown and junior point guard Houston Mallette were All-CIF picks in Division 2A, and Estancia senior center Jake Covey was an All-CIF Division 5AA selection.

Davis averaged 23 points, six rebounds and four assists per game for the Barons (20-11). Fountain Valley was the Wave League runner-up at 4-2, and as the No. 3 seed, it advanced to the Division 3A semifinals before falling 82-70 at No. 2seeded Indio Shadow Hills.

Davis, a first-team All-Wave League pick, also led the No. 15-seeded Barons to the CIF State Southern California Regional Division III semifinals before losing 78-58 at Burbank Providence.

Brown, the Daily Pilot

Dream Team Player of the Year bound for St. Mary's College, averaged team-best totals of 16.6 points and 9.1 rebounds for Pacifica Christian (22-8, 7-1 in San Joaquin League). Mallette averaged 15.7 points and seven rebounds per game, adding a team-best 4.9 assists per game. Both earned first-team All-San Joaquin League honors.

They helped the Tritons win a share of the San Joaquin League title, eventually falling 62-53 to La Verne Bonita in the Division 2A quarterfinals.

Covey averaged 16 points and nine rebounds per game for Estancia (27-4). The Orange Coast League MVP helped the Eagles go 10-0 in the league and win their first league title since the 2004-05 season.

Estancia advanced to the quarterfinals of the Division 5AA playoffs, also the Eagles' furthest playoff run since 2005, before the No. 2seeded Eagles were upset 49-46 at Santa Barbara
