Newport Beach in cleanup mode after flooding of Balboa Peninsula

A rare combination of storm swells and higher-thanusual tides results in the inundation.

BY SARA CARDINE

Newport Beach played host to a massive cleanup effort Monday after southern storm swells and a full-moon high tide Friday compromised a sand berm on the city's Balboa Peninsula and sent water, sand and debris into city streets and residences.

City officials estimated the work — to be executed by a small army of street sweepers and city and contractor work crews equipped with brooms, blowers and shovels — could take from five to seven days.

"Our crews are on it and are going to be working as fast as they can, but we also need to be realistic — it is a pretty massive cleanup," Newport Beach spokesman John Pope said Monday. "The amount of sand and debris that flowed out was pretty shocking."

Weather forecasters said the coastal flooding was a result of a rare conjunction of increased swell caused by storms in the Southern Hemisphere along with higher-thanusual high tides caused by a full moon.

"It was unlucky or coincidental we'd have this southern swell coming at the same time as the highest tides we're likely to see this month," said Miguel Miller, a forecaster with the National Weather Service's San Diego office. "There was definitely a confluence of factors."

Miller said the National Weather Service, alerted

The sun was out in Newport Beach, the skies clear on the eve of July 4 when Bruce Ogilvie plopped down in the sand. But something, he said, felt off.

A lifeguard had chased him out of his usual spot, which seemed puzzling at the time, but then Ogilvie saw the guard sprint into the water and save two girls caught in a rip tide. This wasn't the first rescue of the day, Ogilvie realized, and the guard needed the area cleared to run as fast as he could into the churning ocean.

In hindsight, he said, "I should've realized: 'Hey, something bad's going to happen.'"

By 6 p.m. that evening, huge waves were cresting over Balboa

Pier and flooding through Balboa Peninsula, an idyllic oceanfront community in Orange County barely above sea level. This thin spit of land is all that stands between the ocean and the bay the first line of defense for the rest of the Newport Beach coast.

There wasn't a large enough sand berm in place to protect this sudden breach, and residents said there was little warning except for the full moon overhead creating extremely high tides, and an angry surf that kept getting bigger and bigger.

"It was kind of a triple witching effect," said Ogilvie, who noted that because of the high tide, the peninsula's gate and valves were

Hospital numbers continue steady climb

With 659 inpatients confirmed to have COVID-19, Orange County reaches another high Monday.

BY HILLARY DAVIS

Orange County's coronavirus hospitalizations reached another high Monday with 659 inpatients confirmed to have COVID-19.

Sixteen of the last 18 days have marked records as hospitalizations have climbed rapidly since the county further eased lockdown restrictions last month, according to data released Tuesday by the Orange County Health Care Agency.

On Sunday 634 patients were reported, Saturday's total reached 624 and Friday's 594. From June 18, when 335 people were hospitalized with COVID-19, through Monday, the most recent day for which data are available, the hospitalized population with COVID-19 has increased by 97%.

The number of patients with the disease in intensive care has increased by 59% in that same time frame, with 224 in the ICU on Monday.

The vast majority of hospitalized patients are local residents, but six of Monday's patients were from Imperial County, according to the O.C. agency's Emergency Medical Services division.

The hard-hit rural county, which only has two hospitals but has the highest concentration of COVID-19 cases in the state, has been sending patients to other parts of Southern California to take pressure off its taxed medical facilities. Orange County has not been

Newport-Mesa Unified's plan to start summer sports put on hold

BY SARA CARDINE

Newport-Mesa Unified School District was set to begin summer sports this week — with a slew of coronavirus protections and precautions in place — but officials now say the athletic programs will be postponed until the state issues guidelines for youth sports.

"Regretfully, our plan to reopen athletics must be put on hold at this time," the district said in a news release Tuesday.

"Until there is specific guidance provided by [the California Department of Public Health] regarding recreational team sports or school-based sports, Orange County school districts have been advised not to operate summer youth sports programs."

Newport-Mesa Unified, home to Corona del Mar, Costa Mesa, Estancia and Newport Harbor high schools, initially indicated in a June 25 online notice summer sports programs would begin Monday with face coverings, physical distancing and temperature checks, among other modifications.

That program was to be "voluntary and based on parental discretion."

That announcement followed a June 15 news release from the Orange County Board of Supervisors stating, while games and events would continue to be prohibited, sports teams would be allowed to practice in accordance with protocols outlined in the state's industry guidelines for day camps.

"I advocated for a safe return to youth activities because playing sports is a fantastic way to build character, in addition to burning off the past months' pent-up energy," Orange County Supervisor
Don Wagner said in the June statement

"The state's guidance is the next big step to bringing O.C. back to normal."

But last week, as state officials tightened restrictions on gatherings and group activities in counties, including Orange, with observed spikes in infections and COVID-19 hospitalizations, the fate of youth sports seemed to hang in the balance.

Legal counsel with the Orange County Department of Education weighed in on Monday after receiving queries from school district superintendents about summer athletics and reaching out directly to state health officials through an essential services inquiry.

"CDPH has confirmed that at this time, youth sports, including conditioning activities, are not permitted," General Counsel Jeffrey Riel wrote in a letter to district leaders, indicating the health department was working on, but had not released, guidelines specific to youth sports.

"Until there is specific guidance provided by CDPH regarding recreational team sports or school-based sports, school districts are well advised not to operate summer youth sports programs," Riel by a forecast predicting surf up to 8 feet, issued a beach hazard statement early Thursday morning and later that day upgraded the warning to a high surf advisory for Orange County.

When it became apparent the full moon would coincide with the already risky wave conditions, the agency issued a coastal flood advisory notice for the area early Saturday.

"A long period of southern swell — these are the conditions surfers dream of," Miller said. "But we issued the advisory to say look out for high surf, dangerous rip currents and hazardous swimming conditions. These are the things that usually get swimmers."

A SAND BERM is rebuilt by the city to hold off big waves and high tides at Balboa Pier in Newport Beach. The berm successfully held off large waves on Saturday in contrast to the flooding that occurred on Friday that pushed water into surrounding parking lots, fields and streets.

in part, due to concerns of the still-spreading coronavirus — reported making 100 rescues and issuing some 2,700 preventive warnings to beachgoers.

One lifeguard, Sean Richards, was commended by city officials on Monday for his heroic actions Friday afternoon, performing two back-to-back rescues before collapsing on the beach from exhaustion.

Stationed at the A Street

lifeguard tower near the Balboa Pier at around 4 p.m.

Richards noticed two teenage swimmers in distress, according to a city release issued Monday. After successfully extricating the first victim, the lifeguard returned for the second.

"Richards held the swimmer with one arm while heavy surf slammed them both to the ocean floor and held them under.

The two were also pushed into pier pylons by the strong waves," the re-lease stated. "Richards was able to maintain his grip on the swimmer throughout the ordeal, and both made it to shore."

By the time the National Weather Service had issued its coastal flood advisory, Friday's high surf conditions had already caused water to breach a seasonal sand berm built by the city earlier this summer to absorb excess swell.

Pope said city and contractor crews immediately began rebuilding a new berm on Saturday.

"Our mission was to get the sand berm back in place and higher and wider," he said, adding that eight pieces of heavy equipment - bulldozers and backhoes were employed in the effort.

"That was enough to protect the area from flooding on the second night and the third."

Public Works and contractor crews turned out in full force Monday to clean up public areas near the pier, including a parking lot and some nearby city streets. The work is expected to last throughout

"There's a huge amount of sand and debris. [And] the flood overturned every trash can in the beach parking lot," Pope said. "It was a real mess.'

shut and unable to allow any drainage into the bay. officials were stunned by the ocean's intensity. One lifeguard said he couldn't help but think of a tsunami — big waves are not unusual for Newport Beach, known for epic surf spots like the Wedge, but what surprised him Friday was how each wave did not break nor dissipate.

Each wave seemed to build on top of the next one, moving one large wave farther and farther up the beach until it overtook and eroded the sand berm that had been standing in as protection.

"It came in unexpectedly early and unexpectedly large ... It hit right at high tide," said Mike Halphide, the Newport Beach Fire Department's chief lifeguard. His team that day rescued 100 people overall and prevented more than 2,500 other incidents by warning folks who were about to put themselves in danger.

John Pope, the city's public information officer, said extra crews and machines have been deployed to aggressively build a new, larger and taller sand barrier before the next high tide. "We expected high surf the forecast was about 5 to 7 feet, and as much as 20 feet at the Wedge, but it was just such an unusual confluence of ocean activity," he said. The water pooled into the beach parking lot, submerging cars up to their wheels and covering the pavement with mud, trash and foam. More seawater rushed past the junior lifeguard training station, through the soccer field and onto Ogilvie's street and his neighbors' homes and driveways.

Cars and bikers tried to navigate out of the flood as pedestrians waded through calf-high water. Dramatic news helicopter video showed a 40-foot sailboat battered by angry surf and whitewash. Several people and a dog on board had been rescued shortly before the water smashed everything into pieces, according to KABC-TV.

One seasoned lifeguard had been transported to the hospital earlier after making back-to-back rescues, Halphide said. After the first rescue, the guard immediately went back out and had to take another person through the pier, where waves six to eight feet tall were pounding against the pillars.

"By the time he got the victim to the shore, he was so exhausted and just about collapsed," Halphide said.

"Seriously folks, please please please be careful around the water this weekend," Newport Beach Mayor Will O'Neill wrote on Twitter, along with photos of the shattered sailboat washing ashore. weren't kidding when we said this weekend posed public safety concerns."

O'Neill said on Facebook that Newport Beach is preparing for the next tide.

"Public works crew worked throughout the night and continue to work today with bulldozers to build the berms back up," O'Neill said. "I am confident that you have more questions as we head into an expected higher surf and higher tide tonight. I can say right now that our public works department is working very hard right now."

By Saturday morning, sand dozers greeted beachgoers and those who came to gawk at the scene. A number of cars were still stuck in the mud, and heavy machinery roared and beeped as crews scrambled to build a much bigger sand berm. The flooding had also dumped a large amount of trash and debris that officials said may take up to a week to clean up.

Tita Jaramilla, dressed head to toe in red, white and blue, jogged by with three friends and greeted folks with smiles and a spirited "Happy Fourth!" Every year, she and her friends celebrate the holiday somehow, and this year was no different.

With so much going on and large gatherings and events canceled due to COVID-19 concerns, she said, "We thought we'd have our own little parade this year."

They had planned to run six miles, a July 4 10K, but the flooding had forced them to reroute and run an additional six, almost seven miles. She was a little out of breath by mile 13, but said spending the morning this way meant a lot to her.

"The way our society is, with everything so upside down, I think people have forgotten how much they love our country," she said. "I haven't. I come from a military family. My dad fought in Vietnam and he made sure we have the freedoms that we have now.... We're not going to not celebrate today."

As for Ogilvie, he spent much of the Fourth of July searching for sand bags and moving mud and debris out of his yard and driveway. His house was spared from the water, he said, but his neighbor's home across the street sits on lower ground and had about an inch of water inside.

He recalled waiting for the city to come help pump out the flood, as he and his neighbors stayed up late and tried to clean up the

"The first pump they brought was not big enough, they had to get another pump, and then at some point they just rode it out, praying, hoping that the waves would stop coming and that the tide would go back down and they could open the drains back up so that water would drain to the ocean."

Ogilvie watched cleanup and construction crews Saturday morning and said he hoped the bigger sand berm would be completed in time.

"They need to pile up sand and create a wall, a barrier, so when the waves crash, and they come in, the water can't breach over and go to the soccer field," he said. "Once it crosses over and goes to the soccer field, we're hosed."

Walter "Wally" Robert Gayner

Walter "Wally" Robert Gayner, a handsome, loyal, hard-working family man, loved by all he touched was born on October 3, 1929 to Ann and Walter Gayner in Glendale, CA and died peacefully at his home on July 1, 2020 with his loving wife, Joan, at his side. Wally had a unique presence about him; stunningly charming with a contagious smile, always well-dressed, would walk into a room and all eyes would gaze upon him with admiration, a real guy's guy but most importantly a wonderful gentleman to women. He had "it" all going on.

His father who had been a World War I ace pilot moved the family to Nice, France when Wally was a child. His sister Suzanne, an accomplished child pianist, was born there. The family returned after three years to Southern California where his youngest sister, Patsy, was born. Wally graduated from Los Angeles High School in 1947 where he excelled in swimming and theater, staring in several plays and was an all-city champion swimmer and awarded a scholarship to USC. After one year at USC he left to join the Navy, serving on two aircraft carriers, the USS Princeton and the USS Bairoko where he was stationed at North Island Naval Air Station earned a place on the All-Navy Swim Team. When his service was up, he enrolled at UCLA and became a lifelong Bruin fan. Wally was a member of Delta Tau Delta Fraternity and remained close to his fraternal brothers till death. Loving friends and being loved meant most to Wally and socializing became Wally's biggest character asset making many close friendships along his robust life's journey. Coming from a modest upbringing he loved all people, all types and had a burning desire to succeed in marriage and in business. In 1950 he married his beautiful Trojan sweetheart, Marilyn "Lynn" Bremer, and raised three children in Orange County while spending leisure time traveling the world until Lynn's passing in 2003.

He was an accomplished residential developer and home builder, building over 10,000 homes over four decades shaping Orange County and Southern California communities through his companies Republic Homes and Eagle Development from 1960 to 2000. Wally launched his homebuilding career in the 60s by developing Mesa Verde, a state-of-the-art master planned golf course and residential community in the heart of Costa Mesa. The first parcel he pursued was a bean field near the Santa Ana River bed, now Mesa Verde Golf Course, that the Segerstrom Family sold to Wally and partners, in an effort to offer a combination of new tract and custom homes around a qualify golf course for young families to live, play and shop at nearby South Coast Plaza regional shopping center planning to open in 1967. Mesa Verde was beautifully situated along the west side of Tee Winkle Farm, now Tee Winkle Junior High School, sprawling westward toward Estancia High School. Even today, more than a half century later, Mesa Verde is considered a hidden gem that stood the test of time with winding roads, churches, parks, schools, culde-sac streets with many homes fronting golf links, and innovative home designs that Wally incorporated into the

Besides loving sports and the outdoors, Wally's main hobbies were flying his private small airplanes around to various projects in the southland, hunting in exotic areas of the globe, and building custom homes for his family. He spent many hours with architects designing innovative, cutting-edge features, so he began incorporating features typically found in custom homes into single family tract home designs in the 60's with his residential communities in Friendly Hills in Whittier, Laguna Hills, Mesa Verde and Lake San Marcos. He engineered such innovations as the "split-level" and "patio style, central courtyard" designs in his tract homes. Many of his own custom homes were centered around ranching such as his Castle Ranch, a landmark 1,500 acre working ranch with a private airstrip for his plane, and in Coto de Caza where he raised champion Tennessee Walkers or the ocean and lakes such as his cabin in Lake Arrowhead and his home on the beach in Newport. Wally loved sharing his ranches and waterfront homes by hosting social events with his friends and family. If you were a friend of Wally's you were expected to come visit and horseback ride, hunt, water or snow ski, swim, play tennis or just relax and have a beer or cocktail with him at any of his homes. He had a real "mi casa, su casa" welcoming attitude to all friends and family

His achievements and affiliations were vast and varied, to name a few; Blue Lagoon Villas built in 1962 was the first statutory condominium built in California, initial member of the Balboa Bay Club Board of Directors, President and Founder of the first drug rehabilitation for teenagers in Orange County called Assessment Treatment Service Center (ATSC) "Alternative to the Juvenile Justice System", master planned Ford Aeronutronics site – One Ford Road near Big Canyon, the first President of the Builders Industry Association (BIA) Orange County Chapter and always attended the annual Pacific Coast Builders Conference in San Francisco, received the Mayor's Award from the City of Costa Mesa honoring his Mesa Verde development and its positive community impact to the City, President of Estancia High School Booster Club, longtime UCLA Alumnus and Bruin Football supporter, UCl Advisory Council Member planning student and faculty housing on campus, initial Coto de Caza ranch development, longtime Portola Rider, San Bernardino Sheriff Search and Rescue supporter (allowed use of his helicopter), and Orange County Sheriff Advisory Council longtime member. Wally stood for quality housing for mid-income families, local law enforcement, and helping young people with their careers and challenges

Wally's story telling of his personal adventures was phenomenal, recanting his past like it was just yesterday. One time his buddies met him for lunch at the Club and played a joke by walking out one-by-one during one of Wally's epic stories, as if each guy was going to the bathroom, but he just kept talking even when all had left the table, determined to finish.

In his seventies, he reunited with another beautiful Trojan, Joan Field Riach, whom he had known in high school and were happily married for 10 years. Their second time around romance was magical, loving their travels together and their times with their families and friends. Wally was an amazing and loving husband and a wonderfully supportive and loving father, grandfather and great grandfather.

Wally was predeceased by his mother and father and sister Patsy. He is survived by his wife, Joan, his two daughters, Kyle Gayner and Tracey Gayner with two children Robert Rankin and Cory Poole. His son, Scott Gayner with his children Sammis Nelson Gayner and Cassidy Gayner Reeves married to Dane Reeves with their new baby boy born in January, Logan Scott Reeves, whom Wally adored. His sister Suzanne Peters and many nephews, nieces and cousins. His stepsons Tom Riach Jr. married to Victoria and Steven Riach married to Wendy with eight step grandchildren. an agency spokesman. The change in Orange County's three-day average of total hospitalized patients was 10.6% as of Tuesday, easing back toward the 10% state threshold that would indicate short-term stability.

The three-day hospitalization rate is one of the key metrics the California Department of Public Health is tracking as it determines which counties might have to go back into some level of lockdown as already seen on July 1, when Gov. Gavin Newsom called for the renewed closure of indoor restaurant dining rooms and all bars for at least three weeks in Orange County, among several other counties.

Other state metrics, testing positivity and ICU and ventilator capacity, were mixed. Testing positivity - the percentage of tests that return positive — was at a record-high 14.2% as of Tuesday, well above the state's 8% threshold that Orange County hasn't met since June 25. But 40% of ICU beds and 67% of ventilators were still available in the area Tuesday, well within the state-defined minimums of 20% ICU capacity and 25% ventilator availability.

Also on Tuesday, the county reported 1,010 new confirmed cases of COVID-19. its second straight day of 1,000-plus new cases. Agency spokeswoman Jessica Good confirmed that both of these daily updates showed community transmission of COVID-19 and did not represent a backlog in reporting by the state, which has explained sharp peaks in the recent past.

Orange County has now recorded 18,892 cumulative positive tests for COVID-19. Of those, 8,867 cases are estimated to have recovered.

An additional 8,037 tests were reported Tuesday, bringing that total to 278,696. The county also reported three new COVID-19 related deaths Tuesday, bringing total fatalities to 369. Of those, 191 have been nursing home patients.

If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code.
