Supes say 'no' to Pride flag on county property

Only government flags, as well as the POW/MIA flag, will be allowed to fly on county property after a 3-2 vote during the first meeting of Pride Month.

BY MATT SZABO

Is the LGBTQ+ Pride flag a symbol of inclusion or a symbol of exclusion?

That depends on which Orange County supervisor you ask.

The supervisors hotly debated this at Tuesday morning's meeting before coming to a conclusion on a narrowly split vote.

In their first meeting of Pride Month, they voted 3-2 to restrict flags flown on county property — including parks — to the county, state and American flags, as well as the POW/MIA flag.

The vote on the agenda item, introduced by Supervisor Andrew Do and supported by Chairman Don Wagner and Supervisor Doug Chaffee, effectively bars the LGBTQ+ Pride flag from flying on county property.

It echoes a similar vote by Huntington Beach earlier this year. Unlike Surf City, however, the county did not previously have a policy of flying the Pride flag.

Do, who along with Wagner are the two Republicans on the board, said in his comments that his agenda item had nothing to do with any cause or social issue. He added

Teen arrested in connection to vandalized Pride flag in Surf City

BY ERIC LICAS

A report of a ruined Pride flag in Huntington Beach resulted in the arrest of a teenage boy Saturday and is the first report of that symbol being vandalized in the city so far this year, according to police.

The owner of the rainbow-colored flag told police a boy had ripped it while trying to tear it from its post and used derogatory language toward the LGBTQ+ community at about 9 p.m. on June 3.

Officers responded to the area of 18th Street and Palm Avenue, Huntington Beach police spokeswoman Jessica Cuchilla said.

They found one 13-year-old suspect

UCI gets $50M, plans to launch research groups

A trio of new institutes, called Engineering+, will fall under the umbrella of the Henry Samueli School of Engineering.

BY LILLY NGUYEN

With a $50-million gift from the couple that UC Irvine's engineering school was named for, three new multidisciplinary research institutes will be established under its roof to better foster collaboration across engineering and three other sectors: public health, society and the environment.

These institutes will run under the banner of Engineering+ and will be within the Henry Samueli School of Engineering, according to a news release issued by the university on Monday.

"Universities all across the world say that 'We care about being multidisciplinary,' but a lot of universities don't have the infrastructure in place to truly do it right. This gift allows us to do it really pull people together in a deeply meaningful way to go after big questions that matter both locally and globally," said Magnus Egerstedt, the Stacey Nicholas dean of engineering.

Egerstedt said Engineering+ at UCI will be "a model for universities worldwide on how this can be structured." He said he expects more federally sponsored research will be undertaken as a result of the establishment of the local institutes, and the combined efforts could bring real world solutions to issues like coastal erosion and the potential disruptive forces of artificial intelligence.

What this will look like in the department won't mean new buildings or infrastructure changes on campus, Egerstedt said. It is a reorganization of what already exists to facilitate multidisciplinary research.

"We are going to move people around to get researchers together, but I've started saying that we should not right now try to get better by getting bigger. We should get better by getting better," Egerstedt said.

Balboa Island Parade draws record crowd this year

BY SUSAN HOFFMAN

Thousands of spectators crowded onto the Balboa Island bridge and Marine Avenue late Sunday morning under low clouds to take in the 28th annual Balboa Island Parade.

This year's crowd reached nearly 5,000, a record number for the event, according to Jack Callahan, a longtime member of the Balboa Island Improvement Assn. and its parade committee, who served as grand marshal.

In keeping with last year's popular theme, "Island Rodeo — Boots, Chaps and Cowboy Hats," the theme for this year's parade, which is sponsored annually by the Balboa Island Improvement Assn., was "Horsin' Around Island Style."

Newport Coast residents Jim and Linnea Graves chose to view the parade perched on a planter wall bordering the New-

Costa Mesa man charged with 2022 rape of woman in Newport Beach

BY CITY NEWS SERVICE

A 29-year-old Costa Mesa man was charged Friday with raping a woman and assaulting her with a feeding tube in Newport Beach. Jack Douglas Kanen was charged with two counts of rape, two counts of sexual penetration by a foreign object and force, a count of forcible oral copulation, a count of assault with the intent to commit a sex offense, a count of assault with a deadly weapon and a count of assault with force likely to produce great bodily injury, all felonies.

Kanen, who was being held on $755,000 bail, did not enter a plea at his arraignment in the jail courtroom in Santa Ana Friday. He was ordered to return to court for arraignment June 20 in the Harbor Justice Center in Newport Beach.

Kanen was accused of attacking the victim on Jan. 20, 2022, according to the criminal complaint.

Messages sent to Newport Beach police and the Orange County district attorney's office for further details were not immediately returned.

FOR THE RECORD

A May 11 article incorrectly stated the Costa Mesa Planning Commission required a Northgate Market proposed for Harbor Boulevard to prohibit televisions in outdoor areas. The prohibition only referred to an "open-air" patio along Wilson Street.

You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. The law requires that information about Trustee Sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Website. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. First, 48 hours after the date of the trustee sale, you can call 916.939.0772, or visit this internet website www.nationwideposting.com, using the file number assigned to this case CA05000091-22-1 to find the date on which the trustee's sale was held, the amount of the last and highest bid, and the address of the trustee. RESEARCH

Egerstedt said he spent a little more than 20 years at Georgia Tech, which was founded in 1885, before he moved to UC Irvine, which he joked was more of a "teenager" by comparison. "It's only 60 years old, which mean it's not set in its ways. I was looking for a place ... where new structures could emerge. To me, it was absolutely clear. I interviewed on [the premise that] engineers need to team up with medical researchers, public policy, humanities, the arts, the hard sciences, because only there are we able to get to these solutions. In my mind, I always go back to health, environment and how do we structure our societies?" Egerstedt said.
 Egerstedt said he talked with Henry Samuelli about the establishment of Engineering+ as a way of how a modern university could "really do something big in a nonorthodox or nontraditional way" and how to structure a modern research university. In the news release, the university said the Engineering+ Health Institute will house research for synthetic biology, for example, while the Engineering+ Society Institute might focus on how automation can enhance human experience. Part of the gift will also be put toward establishing an Office of Inreach, focused on the well-being and academic success of undergraduate students within the department — one of Egerstedt's key initiatives. The endowment will also fund research and teaching, workshops, speaker series and events, administrative staff and infrastructure, research grants and faculty retention, graduate student fellowships and other needs that would fall under Engineering+.

 "The enduring generosity of Henry and Susan Samuelli has enabled University of California Irvine researchers to seek answers to the most challenging questions and make breakthroughs that impact all our lives," said UCI Chancellor Howard Gillman in a statement announcing the gift Monday. "The investments the Samuellis have made in UCI over nearly a quarter century — bridging engineering, health, interdisciplinary research and student success — have paid substantial dividends in our institution, our community and the world."

nearby among a group of other minors, Cuchilla said. A second youth was in possession of two additional Pride flags at the time and questioned by police. It was not immediately clear where those other flags came from, and officers had not received reports of any stolen so far this year, Cuchilla said. Police were investigating to determine whether those items were related to a crime. "We take all crimes seriously, including vandalism and theft, especially when it targets a specific community," Cuchilla wrote in a statement Tuesday. "Such actions are completely unacceptable and will be thoroughly investigated." Earlier this year, the City Council voted 4-3 to stop flying the Pride flag at public buildings in the weeks surrounding June, celebrated nationally as Pride Month. Proponents of the move said it was done to keep Huntington Beach in compliance with laws barring the city from displaying nongovernmental flags. But local supporters and members of the LGBTQ+ community said halting the practice has caused them to question whether they are still welcome in the city. About 100 activists gathered in May to unfurl a giant Pride flag from the end of Huntington Beach Pier. On Tuesday, the Orange County Board of Supervisors also voted to stop displaying the rainbow-striped LGBTQ+ banner and other non-government symbols.

Sea of info offered at Laguna Beach KelpFest

BY SARA CARDINE

Most people who live in Laguna Beach, or grew up exploring its 7-mile coastline, understand the vital role kelp plays in the local ecosystem as a buffer against erosion, a carbon neutralizer and refuge for sea life.

But for visitors who may crowd the city's beaches each summer, soaking up the sun with little awareness of the vast kelp forests beneath the ocean's surface, an educational opportunity presented itself Saturday in the annual KelpFest.

Hosted by the nonprofit Laguna Ocean Foundation and held on the cobblestones at Main Beach, the festival teaches attendees the importance of restoring and preserving Orange County coastlines through activities, demonstrations and projects for all ages.

Wendy Berube, education and outreach coordinator for the foundation, says Laguna Beach is the perfect location for the educational effort.

"All of Laguna Beach is a Marine Protected Area — it's the highest level of protection there is," she said Tuesday. "And the kelp forest has the same protection." Visitors Saturday got a chance to learn about sharks and marine mammals by inspecting jawbones, skulls and the bristly baleen that allows non-toothed whales to filter tiny krill and plankton they eat.

Booths set up by participating organizations, including Pacific Marine Mammal Center, Orange County Coastkeeper, O.C. Habitats, Aquarium of the Pacific and an array of local artists attracted more than 500 attendees to the park over a four-hour period.

KelpFest was first held in 2010 and organized by Nancy Caruso, who now works with students growing kelp and raising abalone through the nonprofit Get Inspired, and Mike Bean, founder of the marine restoration group the Laguna Bluebelt Coalition, a participant in Saturday's event.

It was intended to celebrate a years-long effort by local environmental groups and residents working together to restore Laguna Beach's kelp forests, which had previously been reduced by 80%, to a health and density not seen in more than two decades.

The pair handed over the organization of the annual festival in 2016 to Laguna Ocean Foundation, which has continued to spread awareness and education for people whose activities and explorations could inadvertently harm sensitive marine areas and the species that live there.

"When you're walking at the tide pools, you may be stepping on plants or animals," Berube said. "Or kids might poke sea anemones, not knowing they can't eat for 24 hours after that."

Participating in a festival is an easy and fun way to impart lessons about environmental stewardship and expose people to an ecosystem they may have never had a chance to see in person, according to Berube.

"It's a great opportunity to meet up with all the different groups that are working toward the same thing," she said.

port Beach Yacht Club on the corner of Bayside Drive and the entrance to Balboa Island so they could catch the start of the spectacle "before it gets too crazy getting onto the center of Marine," Linnea said.

"We came to support the Balboa Island Improvement Assn. They do such a great job."

First-time volunteer Cori Doughty, who helped with the staging area, getting participants in line, then cleaning up and whatever else was needed, said she was impressed with the efficiency of the operation.

"It's seamless. Jack [Callahan, the organizer] ensures everything runs smoothly," Doughty said. She said her volunteer stint was a great experience.

Among the 90 entries this year were the ever popular crowd favorite four-legged friends marching as the "Golden Retrievers," "Pomeranians on Parade," "Labradors" and, for the first time this year, a group of French bulldogs.

Also new this year, making a grand entrance on horseback, were the "Balboalleros," local cowboys who hang their hats in Newport Beach. All are members of Las Caballeros and are rodeo champions, refined ropers and expert cattlemen.

Three Icelandic horses, bred and trained in Newport Beach, carried riders along the parade route.

The biggest hit, though, especially with kids, were the Mini Madness miniature therapy horses, who mingled with the crowd and performed stunts.

The slice of Americana and hometown feel that make the parade special drew people of all ages, including Lynn Newton, who is 97 years old and lives on North Bayfront.

Newton, an Island resident since 1959, said she attends the parade every year.

"I wouldn't miss it," she said. "Everybody brings together happiness."

FLAG

that government flags represent all county residents.

"We don't need any other symbols surrounding them," he said. "Today, flags in general have become symbols that invite controversy and division within our community."

Wagner admitted, however, that the Pride flag specifically was at the heart of Tuesday's vote, calling the banner "divisive."

Chaffee, a Democrat seen as the swing vote, said during his initial comments that he wanted more time to think about his vote. In the end, however, he sided with Do and Wagner.

"I like to be neutral, I like to be open to everyone," Chaffee said. "There's a reason why this office is nonpartisan ... This is a distraction that takes me away from really working but I'm going to support the motion. I think we need to emphasize more the values in our American flag."

Supervisors Katrina Foley and Vicente Sarmiento, both Democrats, strongly rebuked the vote and the message it sent about Orange County, which has an estimated 3.2 million people.

Foley asked Do if he had asked any county department heads, or the presiding judge at the county courthouse, if they supported his item.

"This is really a political decision," Foley said. "As the sixth largest economy in America, as the fourth largest economy in the state of California, as the home of Disneyland, Vans, so many major corporations who are inclusive ... they are supporting Pride. Not because it's divisive but because it's inclusive. For me, I think it's farcical that we are even having this conversation."

Foley said the county is sending the wrong message to America and to the world.

"We've spent millions of dollars investing in suicide prevention," she said. "But sometimes, suicide prevention is as simple as a rainbow flag flying in the wind on a government building, telling our most vulnerable children we welcome them, and we will keep them safe."

Foley and Sarmiento had requested a discussion at Tuesday's meeting to purchase and raise a Pride flag at the Civic Center. But Foley said in an interview Tuesday that the request was filed to the board clerk 15 minutes past deadline.

"The chairman [Wagner] can still add it to the agenda, but the chairman would not sign off on it," she said, adding that Wagner rejected a separate request for the county to recognize Pride Month as it has done the past two years.

Reaction was swift Tuesday among the local LGBTQ+ community. Neah Lehan, an Irvine native who identifies as LGBTQ+, said the vote was disheartening.

"The Pride flag is not only a symbol of acceptance, it represents support in a time when queer and trans people across America face a hostile legal climate," Lehan said. "I feel privileged and proud to live in such a safe environment as California. Yet given the chance to show solidarity with our rights to personal self-determination, the county has elected to remain silent."

Manny Muro is a Huntington Beach resident who identifies as a queer Latinx and is the vice president of OC Pride. He attended an event last month at the Huntington Beach Pier, where the largest rainbow Pride flag in county history was flown.

"It seems like they're targeting already marginalized communities," Muro said. "It's upsetting, to say the least. It's not only coming from the people in the communities but our community leaders as well."

Fifteen people discussed the item during public comment, with some in support of the government-only flag proposal and some against.

Roseann DiCostanzo, the Orange County chair of New California State, was one of the speakers in favor of the item. New California State is an organization which seeks to break off many rural inland and California areas to form a new state.

"We should have pride in our country, the United States of America, that has given opportunities for all to be as they wish," DiCostanzo said. "You do you, I'll do me. But as a people, we are the United States of America."

Pride Month events continue in Orange County, as Wednesday night the Los Angeles Angels are celebrating Pride Night at Angel Stadium.

"If you look at all the county social media, for all the departments, everybody is celebrating Pride Month," Foley said. "It's really about celebrating the diversity of our community. It's a symbol of being an inclusive community."
